TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HARDINGE STANLEY

LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR OF GREAT BRITAIN

IS

BY HIS LORDSHIP'S PERMISSION

MOST RESPECTFULLY DEDICATED.

P R E F A C E.

I N writing this Manual, it has been my desire to produce a book bearing the same relation to Mr. LEWIN's elaborate treatise as Mr. HAWKINS' Work on the Construction of Wills bears to that of Mr. JARMAN; that is to say, a book of a really practical, but at the same time concise, character.

The law libraries are rich in great works of reference, the store-houses, so to speak, of the Law; but they are, in a great measure, merely collections of "that codeless myriad, that wilderness of single instances," from which it requires many years of study and experience to extract general principles. That this is so was vigorously expressed by the late Sir JAMES FITZJAMES STEPHEN in the preface to his Digest of the Law of Evidence, where he said: "It becomes obvious, that if a lawyer is to have anything better than a familiarity with indexes, he must gain his knowledge in some other way than from existing books on the subject. No doubt such knowledge is to be gained. Experience gives by degrees, in favourable cases, a comprehensive acquaintance with the principles of the law with which a practitioner is conversant. He gets to see that it is shorter and simpler than it looks, and to understand that the innumerable cases, which at first sight appear to constitute the law, are really no more than illustrations of a comparatively small number of principles." That great lawyer, the late Sir GEORGE JESSEL, also pointed out that "the only use of authorities or decided cases is the establishment of some principle which the judge can follow out in deciding the case before him" (a).

Now, in this Work I have endeavoured to extract and formulate the principles of the law of Private Trusts, and, by way of example, have quoted or referred to all the important modern decisions, and a fair collection of the more ancient ones. Thus the reader is enabled to see, at a glance, the law (i.e., the principle) governing any particular point, and then he is further presented with a series of decided cases which prove, illustrate, and explain the application of that principle.

I have chosen modern cases in preference to ancient ones, because, as has been truly said, "the rules of Courts of Equity are not, like the rules of the Common Law, supposed to have been established from time immemorial. It is perfectly well known that they have been established from time to time—altered, improved and refined from time to time. The doctrines are progressive, refined and improved ; and if we want to know what the rules of Equity are, we must look rather to the more modern than the more ancient cases " (b).

Since the last Edition was issued the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, has been passed, and its provisions will be found discussed in Chapter VIII. of Division IV.

Although the present Edition contains fewer pages than the last, nothing essential has been struck out. The change is due in fact partly to an alteration in the type and size of the page, and partly to increased brevity in the statement of the illustrations.

For the reasons above stated, it is hoped and believed that this will prove a useful work to practitioners in both branches of the Legal Profession.

But, in addition to practitioners, there is the large class of students. " I do not expect that they will be able to remember all the illustrative cases ; but I am sure that the fact of these being somewhat numerous will not render the Work less useful to them, but will rather tend to elucidate any difficulties which they might feel in the application of the principles which those cases exemplify. A person of ordinary industry and capacity can easily master the eighty-two Articles of this Work, and may, without great effort, remember the main facts of such of the illustrative cases as are specially named in the body of the text, and are what may be called "leading"; and when he has done so I have no doubt that he will possess such knowledge of the principles upon which the court acts with regard to Private Trusts, as will enable him to pass his examination without difficulty, and to answer all such questions as occur in the every-day experience of a general practitioner.

Lastly, I have to thank my friend and colleague, Mr. J. A. SCULLY, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, and Reader in Equity in the Inns of Court, for Notes on Constructive Trustees, with special reference to Confidential Agents, which he has kindly placed at my disposal, and which have been of great assistance in the preparation of this Edition.

ART. 1.—Definitions of Trust, Trustee, Trust Property, Beneficiary, and Breach of Trust.

A trust is an equitable obligation, either expressly undertaken, or constructively imposed by the Court, whereby the obligor (who is called a trustee) is bound to deal with property over which he has control (which is called the trust property), for the benefit of persons (who are called the beneficiaries or cestuis que trust), of whom he may or may not himself be one, and any one of whom may enforce the

Art. 1. obligation (a). Any act or neglect on the part of a trustee which is not authorised or excused by the terms of the trust instrument, or by law, is called a breach of trust.

Examination
definition.

More than one definition of a trust is to be found in the recognized text books; but none of these learned and excellent works contain a definition which is altogether satisfactory.

The late Mr. Lewin, in his treatise on Trusts, adopts Lord Coke's definition of a use as equally applicable to a trust, namely, "A confidence reposed in some other, not issuing out of the land, but as a thing collateral, annexed in privity to the estate of the land, for which cestui que trust has no remedy but by subpœna in Chancery." This, however, is applicable to real estate only, and certainly not to trusts of choses in action, the equities attaching to which are, generally speaking, not merely collateral. The expression "some other" is also apt to mislead, and to convey the erroneous impression that the trustee must be some other than either the person who creates the trust, or the beneficiary under it. Then, so far as the remedy is concerned, the definition is obsolete. The Court of Chancery no longer exists, and all branches of the High Court take cognizance of equitable rights, although the Chancery Division is the proper branch in which to enforce express trusts.

Another eminent author, the late Mr. Spence, defines a trust as "a beneficial interest in, or beneficial ownership of, real or personal property, unattended with the possessory or legal ownership thereof"; and this definition was adopted by the late Mr. Snell, and the late Judge Josiah Smith, in their respective works on Equity. An almost similar definition is given by Mr. Justice Story, in his comprehensive work on Equity, where he says: "A trust may be defined to be an equitable right, title, or interest in property, real or personal, distinct from the legal ownership thereof."

(a) The reader is referred to Mr. Walter G. Hart's very interesting article on "What is a Trust," in the Law Quarterly Review for July, 1899.

It would seem, however, with most unfeigned respect for the memory of those four eminent and learned writers, that their definitions are not definitions of a trust at all, but rather of the beneficial interest or property of persons in whose favour a trust is created.

Mr. H. A. Smith in his "Principles of Equity" also points out, that Mr. Spence's definition omits to take account of what are known as special trusts, in which the object of the trust is the performance of some particular duty, rather than the vesting of beneficial ownership in some person other than the legal owner; and he defines a trust as "a duty, deemed in equity to rest on the conscience of a legal owner."

This definition, although decidedly superior to those hitherto discussed, is nevertheless not quite accurate, being both too wide and too narrow.

In the first place, it is too wide; because it would be almost, if not quite, as good a definition of any other equitable obligation.

In the second place, it is too narrow; because a person may be a trustee, without being the legal owner of property; e.g., he may be trustee of an equity of redemption, or of an equitable interest arising under another trust, or even of an expectancy.

I have therefore felt myself obliged to reject all the definitions above referred to, and to endeavour to construct an independent one. And in doing so it became necessary to consider the nature of a trust.

Sir Frederick Pollock, in his learned work on Contracts, considers that a trust is, in its inception, a form of contract; but admits that the complex relations involved in a trust, cannot be conveniently reduced to the ordinary elements of a contract, and that there is sufficient justification for the course adopted by all English writers of treating trusts as a separate branch of law.

And indeed, it is sufficiently obvious that, according to English Law, there is at least one important distinction between contracts and trusts, viz., that an executed trust

Art. 1. may be enforced by a person for whose benefit it was made, although he may not have been party or privy to it.

At the same time, there can be no doubt that trusts are somewhat analogous to that class of common law cases, which lie on the border line between contract and tort (of which Coggs v. Bernard (b) is the leading instance), the principle of which is, that the confidence induced by undertaking any service for another, is a sufficient legal consideration to create a duty in its performance, a principle which has been adopted in dealing with express trusts.

However, whatever a trust may be in its inception, it radically differs from all other duties in this, that prior to recent legislation it was a duty which could not be enforced at common law, and which was only enforceable in Chancery on the ground that a breach of the duty was so unconscientious as to call for the equitable interference of the Chancellor.

It is therefore convenient to regard a trust as "an obligation," that is to say, "a tie of equity (vinculum juris), whereby one person is bound to perform or forbear some act for another" (c).

The obligation is, or at all events in its inception was, an equitable one, enforceable only in courts of equity, although, by recent legislation, all courts take cognizance of trusts. It is also an obligation relating exclusively to property. An obligation to do or forbear some act not relating to property is not a trust, whatever else it may be. For a trust is purely a creature of equity, and equity concerns itself solely with property.

It is, further, an obligation, the due performance of which necessarily implies that the obligor has some control over the property which is the subject of the trust, for otherwise he would be unable to deal with it for the benefit of the beneficiaries; and although, as will be seen hereafter, in the case of simple trusts, the control is merely nominal

(b) 1 Sm. L. C. 167; and see also Foulkes v. Metropolitan District Rail. Co., 5 C. P. D. 157.

(c) Encyc. Brit. Art. "Obligation."

(consisting solely in the trustee being the depositary of the legal title), yet some scintilla of control is absolutely necessary to the existence of a trust.

Persons are sometimes called trustees who are not so in the ordinary sense, e.g., trustees for purposes of the Settled Land Acts and trustees of strict settlements with powers of sale to be carried out by revocation of uses and new appointment. In both cases such persons may become trustees when they receive purchase money or when they exercise the powers confided in them, but until then they are not trustees in the sense in which the word is used in this work.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

1. A testator bequeaths £1,000 to A., upon trust to invest it in government stock, and to pay the dividends to B. for life, and after B.'s death to sell the stock and divide the proceeds among B.'s children. A trust is at once created in A. In other words, he would be under an equitable obligation to deal with the £1,000 (the trust property) for the benefit of B. and B.'s children (the beneficiaries) according to the testator's directions.

2. A., by deed, declares that he holds £1,000 government stock standing in his own name and belonging to him, in trust to pay the dividends to himself for life, and after his death, upon trust to pay the dividends to his wife for life, and, after the death of the survivor of them, upon trust to sell the stock and divide the proceeds among their children. Here A. is both creator of the trust, trustee, and one of the beneficiaries. If he were the sole beneficiary, the trust would never arise, for a man cannot enforce a trust against himself. Or, if he became such by surviving his wife and children, and becoming the sole personal representative and next of kin of the latter, it would cease; because the trusteeship would merge and become extinguished in the beneficial ownership.

Art. 2.ART. 2.—*Definitions of Legal and Equitable Estates.

The interest of a beneficiary in trust property is called an equitable estate, because it was originally only recognized in courts of equity. A legal estate, on the other hand, is that proprietary interest which has been acquired with all the formalities which are required by the common or statute law for perfecting the owner's legal title, or which has devolved by legal descent. A trustee mostly, but not necessarily or always, has a legal estate in the trust property.

Distinction
important.

When the Judicature Act of 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66) was first passed, it was thought by many that the former distinctions between legal and equitable estates were abolished, and that henceforth every equitable interest would be, in effect, a legal one. Such persons, however, overlooked the fact that, even if the fusion of law and equity justified the application of the adjective "legal" to rights and interests formerly ignored by the common law, and invented by judicial equity, such a change of nomenclature would not do away with the fundamental and ineradicable distinctions which exist between legal and equitable estates. As Lord SELBORNE said, in introducing the Judicature Act into the House of Lords, "If trusts are to continue, there must be a distinction between what we call a legal and an equitable estate. The legal estate is in the person who holds the property for another; the equitable estate is in the person beneficially interested. The distinction between law and equity is, within certain limits, real and natural, and it would be a mistake to suppose that what is real and natural ought to be disregarded, although under our present system it is often pushed beyond these limits" (d).

The old legal estate, therefore, still subsists; and although equitable estates are now recognised by all branches of the Supreme Court (and may therefore in a sense be called legal), it has been found more convenient to retain the old nomenclature, signifying, as it does, a real and substantial difference, which would still exist, even although the terms legal and equitable estates were abolished.

It must not, however, be assumed that the estate of a trustee is always legal. The estate of the beneficiary is always equitable, so long as the trust subsists; but so also may be the estate of the trustee. For instance, the trust property may consist of land mortgaged to a third party. In that case the legal estate would be in the mortgagee, an equity of redemption (which is a purely equitable estate) in the trustee, and another equitable estate in the beneficiary.

The difference between legal and equitable estates is not merely of theoretical interest. In cases of breach of trust (as will appear later on in this treatise (e)), it is of vital importance, owing to the maxim that “Where the equities are equal the law prevails.” In other words, where a question of priority arises between two claimants, each of whom has an equally just claim, then, if one of them has the legal estate, he will be preferred to the other, even though the title of such other arose before that of the claimant having the legal estate (f).

2. A., the owner of a copyhold estate, on the marriage of his daughter, C., covenants with her and her intended husband that he will duly vest the copyholds in B., upon trusts similar to those stated in the last illustration. Here, until the copyholds are duly surrendered by A., and until B. is duly admitted tenant on the court rolls, the latter has a mere equitable estate, although he is trustee. For copyholds can only be conveyed at common law by surrender and admittance.

3. A., by will, devises a freehold estate to B. in fee simple, to the use of C. during her life, and after C.'s death, to the use of B., his heirs and assigns, for ever, in trust to sell, and divide the proceeds among C.'s children. Here, by virtue of the Statute of Uses, the legal estate is split up into a life estate in C. (who is accordingly a legal tenant for life, and not a mere beneficiary under a trust), with remainder to B. in fee simple. The trust, therefore, is a trust of the reversion, and does not become an active trust until the death of C. When that event happens, the trustee steps into possession of the rents and profits, and his fiduciary duties become active.

ART. 3.—Definitions of Declared (or Express) and Constructive Trusts.

In relation to their inception, trusts are divisible into two classes :

- (1) A declared or express trust means a trust created by words evincing an intention to create a trust. If the words be contained in a document, such document is called a settlement, whether it be a simple writing, a deed, or a will. The person who provides the trust property is called the settlor.

- (2) A constructive trust means a trust which is not created by any words evincing an intention to create a trust, but by the construction of equity, in order to satisfy the demands of justice.

This classification seems to me to be preferable to that usually adopted, of express, implied, and constructive trusts. Some writers class trusts declared by words of prayer, desire, hope, or the like (precatory words), as “implied trusts.” Others, on the other hand, class what are known as resulting trusts (that is, trusts arising by implication of equity in favour of a settlor where an express trust has failed, or the like), as “implied trusts.” It appears to me, however, that trusts arising from precatory words are essentially express trusts—that is to say, they are expressed, although in ambiguous and uncertain language. Resulting trusts, on the other hand, are clearly constructive, as they can only arise in the absence of express direction. Moreover, the whole of the law as to express trusts is applicable to trusts created by precatory expressions; and there is, therefore, no justification for treating them as a separate and distinct class.

Reasons for this classification.

Resulting
trust.

1. A., by his will, gives property to B. in trust for C., who dies before the testator. Here the trust in favour of C. lapses; but, as it is obvious that the testator never intended that B. should have the beneficial interest in the property, equity constructs a trust in favour of A.'s heir, or residuary devisee, or personal representatives, or residuary legatee, as the case may require. That is an example of that species of "constructive trust" which is known as a "resulting trust," from the Latin verb resultare, to spring back.

Pure
trust.

2. A trustee of a leasehold house, at the termination of the lease, uses his position to induce the landlord to renew the lease to him. Here, equity regards the attempt of the trustee to snatch a personal benefit for himself in antagonism to his beneficiaries, as an act of ill-faith, and will consequently decree that the trustee must hold the new lease upon the same trusts as he held the old and expired one. That is an instance of a constructive trust, which is not a resulting one.

ART. 4.—Definitions of Simple and Special Trusts.

In relation to the nature of the duty imposed on the trustee, trusts are divided into simple and special trusts:

- (1) A simple trust is a trust in which the trustee is a mere passive depositary of the trust property, with no active duties to perform, and who would, on the requisition of his beneficiaries, be compellable in equity to convey the estate to them or according to their direction. Such a trustee is called a passive trustee. Art. 4.

- (2) A special trust is a trust in which a trustee is appointed to carry out some scheme particularly pointed out by the settlor, and is called upon to exert himself actively in the execution of the settlor's intention. The trustee of a special trust is called an active trustee.

2. Again, if the trust had been during C.'s life to collect Special trust the rents and profits, and to pay thereout the cost of repairs and insurance, and to pay the residue of such rents and profits to C. during his life, and after C.'s death to hold the property in trust for D., the trust would have been a special trust during the life of C., and B. would have been an active trustee ; for the trustee during that period would have had active duties to perform. But upon C.'s death, the trust would have become a simple trust, and B. a passive trustee, inasmuch as, although there were originally active duties attached to the trustee's office, those duties lapsed by the death of C., and the only duty which remained was to convey the legal estate to D.

CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCTION.

ART. 5.—Analysis of a Declared or Express Trust.

(1) A valid and binding express trust is primâ facie made if—

- (a) the settlor has used language evincing an intention to create a trust (a), and such intention is not negatived by the surrounding circumstances (b);
- (b) the trust is either created by will, or based upon valuable consideration; or (if neither) the trust property has been either transferred to a trustee, or the settlor has constituted himself a trustee of it for the purposes of the trust (c); Art. 5.

- (c) the trust property is of such a nature as to be capable of being settled (d);
- (d) the object of the trust is lawful (e);
- (e) the settlor has complied with the provisions of the law as to evidence (f).

These prima facie essentials will be examined at length in Chapter II.

(2) But a trust, prima facie valid, may yet be impeachable from—

- (a) incapacity of the settlor (g), or of the beneficiaries (h);
- (b) some mistake made by, or fraud practised on the settlor, at its creation (i);
- (c) fraudulent intention by the settlor, to defeat or delay his creditors (k);
- (d) infringement of the provisions of the Bankruptcy Acts (l);
- (e) fraudulent intention by the settlor to defeat the claims of future purchasers from him (m).

These latent flaws will be considered in Chapter III.

(3) And lastly, the circumstances under which the trust was created, may be such as to necessitate a very liberal construction being given to the language in which it was declared, so as to give effect to the manifest intentions of the settlor (n). These questions of construction will be dealt with in Chapter IV.

ART. 6.—Language evincing an intention to create a Trust.

(1) No technical expressions are needed for the creation of an express trust (a). It is sufficient if the settlor indicates with reasonable certainty :—

- (a) an intention to create a trust ;
- (b) the purpose of the trust ;
- (c) the beneficiaries ; and
- (d) the trust property (b).

(2) In particular it has been held that :—

- (a) an imperative direction that property shall be held for certain expressed purposes creates a trust (c) ;

(a) Dipple v. Corles, 11 Hare, 183 ; Cox v. Page, 10 Hare, 163.

(b) Knight v. Knight, 3 Beav. 148.

(c) As to how far gifts “upon condition” or “subject to legacies” or the like, create trusts, as distinguished from charges or conditions, see Cunningham v. Foot, 3 App. Cas. 974, and cases there cited.

- (b) an agreement for valuable consideration that a trust shall be created, creates a trust ; Art. 6.
- (c) a power of appointment among a class (d), unaccompanied by a gift over in default of appointment (e), may create a trust in favour of the objects of the power, if there appears to be an intention to benefit them (f) ;
- (d) a gift by will to a person, followed by precatory words expressive of the donor's request, recommendation, desire, hope or confidence, that the property will be applied in favour of others, may create a trust, if on the whole will it appears that the testator intended the words to be imperative and the subject of the gift is well defined and certain (g). The current of modern authority is, however, against construing precatory words as imposing trusts (h).

The latitude of expression allowed to the creator of a trust is an instance of the maxim that "Equity regards the intention rather than the form." Wherever the intent is apparent, it will (other matters being in order) be carried into effect, however rudely or elliptically it may have been expressed.

rule

(d) This principle has been extended to a power of appointment in favour of a single individual, sed quare, Tweeddale v. Tweeddale, 7 Ch. D. 633 (see infra, p. 22) ; Wheeler v. Warner, 1 S. & S. 304.

(e) Burrough v. Philcox, 5 M. & C. 92 ; Grievson v. Kirsopp, 2 Keen, 653 ; Brown v. Higgs, 4 Ves. 708.

(f) Re Weekes, [1897] 1 Ch. 289.

(g) See Mussoorie Bank v. Raynor, 7 App. Cas. 321.

(h) Re Diggles, Gregory v. Edmondson, 39 Ch. D. 253 ; Re Adams and Kensington Vestry, 27 Ch. D. 394 ; Re Hamilton, Trench v. Hamilton, [1895] 1 Ch. 373, and cases there cited, and Mussoorie Bank v. Raynor, 7 App. Cas. 321.

Art. 6.

Of course, the words "in trust for," or "upon trust to," are the most proper for expressing a fiduciary purpose; but wherever a person vests property in another, and shows an intention that such other is to apply it for the benefit of third parties, who are sufficiently pointed out, an express trust will be created, whatever form of words may have been used.

Agreements to create trusts.

The rule that a valid agreement to create a trust in futuro, is sufficient to create a trust in presenti, so as to bind the property in the hands of the parties, or those having notice of the agreement, depends on the maxim that "Equity regards that as done which ought to be done." It follows, therefore, that where a trust is created by an agreement to do something, it depends for its validity on the question whether the agreement is one of which Equity would decree specific performance. If, therefore, it was merely a voluntary promise (or even a covenant under seal, not supported by valuable consideration), no trust will be created; for there is nothing in the case of such an agreement which ought to be done, and therefore nothing which can, under the foregoing maxim, be considered as done, by the court. This distinction between trusts depending on contracts, and trusts actually declared, will be emphasised in Art. 8.

trusts.

With regard to trusts arising out of powers of selection, where the trust property is not given over in the event of no selection being made, the court proceeds on the assumption that, by giving property to another for distribution among a class according to his discretion, and by making no provision for the destination of the property in the event of such other neglecting to make the distribution, the donor shows a clear intention that the property is to belong to the class equally, unless the donee of the power distributes it among them unequally.

trusts.

The subject of precatory words at first sight presents more difficulty, for it is not easy to suppose, at the present day, that a donor intends to impose an enforceable obligation, by means of words indicating request rather than command. The explanation is to be sought in the origin of trusts, and affords a proof of how much English equity is indebted for its principles to the Roman law.

The Voconian law precluded the appointment of a female, even when an only child, as heir. In order to evade this, it became the practice of Roman fathers, to constitute, by will, a qualified male heir, upon trust that he would restore the property to the testator's daughter. Before the time of Augustus, the performance of these trusts (fidei commissa) were left entirely to the honesty and conscience of the person trusted; and consequently, it is not surprising, that testators used words of entreaty or prayer, rather than of command, well knowing that the fulfilment of their wishes was dependent on the good will of the person addressed. Thus we find that Roman testators usually adopted such forms of expression as peto, rogo, volo, fidei tuæ committo, and the like. When, in the time of Augustus, fidei commissa became enforceable, the question arose whether wills made in the old precatory form were to be considered imperative; and Justinian settled the point by ordaining that, where the intention of the testator was clear, it should be equally effectual, whether it was expressed in direct or in precatory language.

Whatever may have been the origin of uses (the predecessors of trusts) in England, there is no doubt that, at an early stage, they were (on the Roman precedent) resorted to as a means of regaining the power of devising real estate, which had been abolished by the Norman kings. The property was given during the owner's lifetime to a friend, who undertook to hold it to the use of the owner during his life, and after his death to such uses as he might appoint by will; and this device, although rendered unnecessary as to freeholds by the statutes 32 Hen. 8, c. 1, and 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 5, and the subsequent conversion of all freehold into socage tenure, continued to be used with respect to copyholds down to 1815. The courts of common law refused to enforce these uses, and it would seem that they were commonly and notoriously used for some time before the Court of Chancery interfered; for in the reign of Henry IV., the Commons complained, that many feoffees

Art. 6. to uses (trustees) alienated and charged the property confided to them, for which they stated there was no remedy.

Consequently, as in the case of the Roman fidei commissa, a non-enforceable trust would naturally be created by the use of precatory words, and, when the Chancellors took upon themselves to enforce trusts, they would, both on grounds of reason and on the analogy of the Roman precedents, naturally regard precatory trusts as equivalent to those created by more precisely imperative forms of expression.

There can be no doubt, however, that the reasons which induced the early Chancellors to construe precatory words as imperative, are no longer of the same force. Cessante ratione cessat lex; and although respect for precedent has, until recently, caused the court to construe such expressions as binding on the donee of property, the current has now set strongly in the opposite direction. As Lord Justice LINDLEY said in the course of his judgment in the case of Re Hamilton, Trench v. Hamilton (i): "We are bound to see that beneficiaries are not made trustees unless intended to be made so by their testator. You must take the will which you have to construe, and see what it means; and if you come to the conclusion that no trust was intended, you say so, although previous judges have said the contrary on wills more or less similar to the one which you have to construe." In short, the court will now be guided by the intention of the testator apparent in the will, and not by any particular words in which the wishes of the testator are expressed (k).

property for the benefit of C. In all these cases a trust is created in favour of C. (l). Art. 6.

2. Moreover, where a trust is clearly intended, then (subject to the rules as to voluntary trusts set forth in Art. 8, infra) the mere omission to name a trustee will not invalidate the trust; for it is a maxim of equity that it never allows a trust to fail for want of a trustee. Thus, where, before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), money was bequeathed to a married woman for her separate use, it became at law the husband's property; but in equity the executors were regarded as trustees for the wife, because the intention to create a trust (by which alone the separate use could have any effect) was clear (m). No trustee named.

3. So if the trustee appointed, fails, either by death (n), or disclaimer (o), or incapacity (p), or otherwise (q), the trust does not fail, but fastens upon the conscience of any person (other than a purchaser for value without notice) into whose hands the property comes (r); and such person holds it as a passive trustee, whose duty is to convey it to new trustees when properly appointed (s). Failure of trustee.

4. Again, if before the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), a testator directed a sale of lands and a division of the proceeds, but named no person to sell, and did not in terms devise the property, it descended at law to his heir; but the latter was regarded in equity as a mere passive trustee, who was bound to convey the legal estate to trustees appointed by the court for the purpose of carrying out the trust (t). In cases since the Land Transfer Act, 1897, Direction in a will that land shall be sold.

Contracts to create trusts 1. The most usual instance of trusts arising out of contract (or trusts in fieri, to use a technical expression) is afforded by marriage articles. Not infrequently it would take so long to draw up a formal settlement, that the marriage would be unduly delayed if it were postponed until the settlement was executed. In such cases, articles of agreement are signed, by which, in consideration of the marriage, the parties agree to execute a formal settlement, vesting certain property upon trusts indicated more or less roughly; and thereupon equity, regarding that as done which ought to be done, fastens a trust on the property, and regards any dealings with it inconsistent with the agreement, not only as a breach of contract, but also as a breach of trust.

2. A marriage settlement contains a covenant by the intended husband that he will transfer to the trustees any property which may accrue to him in right of his wife during the marriage. Upon any property becoming vested in him jure mariti, he immediately becomes a trustee of it, upon trust to transfer it to the trustees; and until that is done he himself holds it upon the trust declared in the settlement (u).

should stand in his name, and certain real estates remain unalienated "until the following contingencies are completed." He then proceeded to give life estates to his children, with remainder to their issue, and declared, that if his children should both die without issue, the properties should be disposed of as after mentioned,—namely, the survivor of his children should have power to dispose by will of the said real and personal estate amongst the testator's nephews and nieces, or their children, either all to one of them, or to as many of them as his, the testator's, surviving child should think proper. It was held that a trust was created in favour of the testator's nephews and nieces, and their children, subject only to a power of selection and distribution; Lord COTTENHAM saying, "Where there appears a general intention in favour of a class, and a particular intention in favour of individuals of a class to be selected by another person, and the particular intention fails from that selection not being made, the court will carry into effect the general intention in favour of the class."

Art. 6.

2. And so, where a testator gave personalty to his widow for life, and to be at her disposal by her will, "therewith to apply part for charity, the remainder to be at her disposal among my relations, in such proportions as she may be pleased to direct"; and the widow died without appointing the property; it was held that half was to be held in trust for charitable purposes, and the residue for the testator's relatives according to the Statutes of Distribution (y).

3. The fact of there being a gift over in default of selection, is, however, fatal to any trust under the present rule, even although the gift over is void (z). But a residuary gift is not "a gift over" for this purpose (a). Gift over in default of appointment destroys implied trust.

4. Moreover, even where there is no gift over, there must be a general intention apparent to benefit the class. Thus, No implied trust unless general intention to benefit apparent.

Art. 6. in Re Weekes (b), there was a gift to the testatrix's husband for life, with power by deed or will to dispose of the property amongst their children. ROMER, J., after elaborately examining all the decisions, pointed out that there was no gift to such of the class as the husband might appoint, but merely a bare power to appoint among a class, and that the mere giving of a power did not of itself show that general intention to benefit the class, which was apparent in cases where the selection only was confided to the donee of the power. This case appears to the present writer to be inconsistent with that in Tweedale v. Tweedale (c), which would probably not now be followed.

1. With regard to precatory words, it was, at one time, often a matter of difficulty to decide whether a trust was created or not. A testator bequeathed property to A., and stated, either that he "hopes and doubts not" (d), "entreats" (e), "recommends" (f), "desires" (g), "requests" (h), or "well knows" (i), that it will be applied for the benefit of B. In such cases, according to the older authorities, a trust would be created in favour of B., unless the property or the mode of its application for B.'s benefit, were ambiguously or insufficiently stated, or unless there were expressions inconsistent with an imperative trust, e.g., where the bequest was to the legatee "for his sole use and benefit" (k), or for "her absolute use" (l). But as above stated, no technical meaning is now given to precatory words, and each will must be construed by itself without regard to previous cases, the sole question being whether or not the testator has manifested an intention to impose on the legatee any fiduciary duty (n). Art. 6.

As Sir A. HOBHOUSE, in delivering judgment in Mussoorie Bank v. Raynor (n), said: "Their lordships are of opinion that the current of decisions, now prevalent for many years in the Court of Chancery, shows that the doctrine of precatory trusts is not to be extended; . . . Now these rules are clear, with respect to the doctrine of precatory trusts, that the words of gift used by the testator must be such that the court finds them to be imperative on the first taker of the property, and that the subject of the gift over must be well-defined and certain. If there is uncertainty as to the amount or nature of the property that is given over, two difficulties at once arise. There is not only difficulty in the execution of the trust, because the court does not know on what property to lay its hands, but the uncertainty in the subject of the gift has a reflex action upon the previous words, and throws doubt upon the intention of the testator, and seems to show that he could not possibly have intended his words of confidence, hope, or whatever they may be—his appeal to the conscience of the first taker—to be imperative words (o)."

OBSERVATION.

In order to obviate any confusion in the reader's mind, it is desirable at this place to draw attention to the fact that he must carefully distinguish between cases in which it has been held that precatory words are not imperative, and

Art. 6. raise no trusts at all, and cases in which the words actually used, or the surrounding circumstances, make it clear that, although the donor has not sufficiently specified the property, the objects, and the way it shall go, yet he never meant the donee to take the entire beneficial interest. In such cases, which are treated of in Division III., the law implies a resulting trust in favour of the donor or his representatives. Cases of precatory words must also be carefully distinguished from those constructive trusts which arise out of the fraud of those to whom a settlor communicates a disposition which he has formerly made in their favour, but at the same time tells them that he has a purpose to answer, which he has not expressed in the formal instrument, and which he depends upon them to carry into effect, and to which they assent.

ART. 7.—Of Illusory Trusts.

Where persons are, by the form of the settlement, apparently beneficiaries, but the object of the settlor, as gathered from the whole settlement, does not appear to have been to create a trust for their benefit, they cannot call upon the trustee to carry out the settlement in their favour.

1. Thus, where a person who is indebted, makes provision for payment of his debts generally, by vesting property in trustees upon trust to pay them, but does so behind the backs of the creditors and without communicating with them, the trustees do not necessarily become trustees for the creditors. "The motive of the party executing the deed may have been either to benefit his creditors or to promote his own convenience; and the court has therefore to examine into the circumstances for the purpose of ascertaining what was the true purpose of the deed; and this examination does not stop with the deed itself, but must be carried on to what has subsequently occurred, because the party who has created the trust may, by his own conduct, or by the obligations which he has permitted his trustee to contract, have created an equity against himself" (p).

Art. 7.

No doubt in the case of a trust deed for the benefit of creditors generally, the inference is that it was made for the debtor's convenience. It is as if he had put a sum of money into the hands of an agent with directions to apply it in paying certain debts, and such a trust is revocable, the debtor being, in fact, the sole beneficiary (q). But on the other hand, where the creditors are parties to the arrangement, the inference then is, that the deed was intended to create a trust in their favour, which they are entitled to call on the trustee to execute (r). And so, even though they be not made parties, yet if the debtor has given them notice of the existence of the deed, and has expressly or impliedly told them that they may look to the trust property for payment, they may become cestuis que trusts (s) if they have been thereby induced to exercise forbearance in respect of their claims (t); or if they have assented to the deed and actively (and not merely passively) acquiesced in it, or have acted under its provisions and complied with its terms, and the other side has expressed no dissatisfaction, but not otherwise (u). Moreover, where the trust is for particular named creditors (at all events where the facts show that the object of the settlor was to give them a preference over the Art. 7. general body of his creditors) (x), the inference is that they were intended to be benefited, and a similar inference arises where the deed provides for payment of the settlor's debts at his death with remainders over (y). And where it provides for such payment either in the settlor's lifetime or after his death, it can (it would seem) be enforced by the creditors unless he revokes it in his lifetime (z).

Direction to trustees to pay costs, etc.

2. So, where there was an assignment of property to trustees upon trust to pay all costs, charges and expenses of the deed, and other incidental charges and expenses of the trust, and to reimburse themselves, and then to pay over the residue to third parties, it was held, that a solicitor who had prepared the deed, and had acted as solicitor to the trustees, was not a beneficiary. It was not that the trust did not provide for the costs, or that they were not to be paid, but simply that the solicitor was not a beneficiary under the trust for the payment of them. The trust might of course be enforced, but not by the solicitor (a).

Direction to employ and pay a named person.

3. It was at one time considered, that a positive direction to the trustees of a will to employ a particular person and to allow him a salary, created a trust in his favour (b); but this view can no longer be supported, the House of Lords having decided the contrary in the leading case of Shaw v. Lawless (c). Thus, a direction in a will appointing a particular person solicitor to the trust estate, imposes no trust or duty on the trustees of the will to continue such person as their solicitor in the management of the estate (d).

who receive them from the Treasury (e). And even where her late Majesty, by royal warrant, granted booty of war to the Secretary of State for India in trust to distribute amongst the persons found entitled to share in it by the Court of Admiralty, it was held that the warrant did not operate as a declaration of trust, but merely made the Secretary of State the agent of the Sovereign for the purpose of distributing the fund (f). The late Lord Justice JAMES, in giving judgment, said: "The instrument was a warrant, and I am of opinion, although the term 'grant' is used as being the effect of the warrant, that the instrument is what it purports to be, a warrant. It is a direction by the Sovereign, ordering and authorising that Sovereign's servant, having possession of the Sovereign's money, to deal with it in a certain way, and the word 'trust' introduced into the warrant has really no magical effect. It does not become a trust in the sense of a trust cognizable and enforceable in a court of law, because that word is used. . . . The Secretary of State (whichever Secretary of State for the time being it is who has to deal with this matter), deals with it as the agent of the Crown, bound no doubt under his responsibility to Parliament, and the moral responsibility which the Crown itself has undertaken from having once made this intimation of bounty, but subject to accounting to the Sovereign, and subject to accounting to Parliament in case there is any malfeasance or nonfeasance in the matter."

(b) the settlor has transferred, or done all in his power to transfer, the trust property to a trustee; or, has expressly or by conduct constituted himself a trustee for the purposes of the trust (g).

(2) In other cases the court will not enforce a voluntary trust if the settlor has merely undertaken, or even covenanted, to create a trust, or otherwise manifested an incomplete intention to do so (h).

(3) Even where valuable consideration has been given for an incomplete trust, it will only be enforced if some person privy to that consideration seeks to have it enforced (i). But if enforced at all, it will be enforced in favour of all the beneficiaries, and not merely of persons privy to the consideration. In that case the settlor, or his successors in title (other than purchasers for value without notice), will be regarded as passive trustees, charged with the duty of transferring the trust property to active trustees when appointed (k).

(4) Persons privy to valuable consideration comprise—

- (c) trustees for any of the foregoing (n).

(5) A beneficiary under a voluntary trust, or who is not privy to valuable consideration (where the trust is based on value), is called a volunteer.

It is a well-known maxim, that equity gives no assistance to volunteers ; but, like many other epigrammatic expressions, it cannot be accepted literally. The true rule is, that equity will give no assistance to volunteers for the purpose of enforcing an inchoate intention to confer a bounty. Where a trust has once been completely declared, or a gift completely made, equity will enforce the trust, or uphold the gift, whether the party applying for relief gave valuable consideration or not. As Mr. Justice KAY said in Henry v. Armstrong (o), "The law is, that anybody of full age and sound mind, who has executed a voluntary deed by which he has denuded himself of his own property, is bound by his own act." And the same result follows if he has declared himself, or afforded clear evidence that he considered himself, a trustee of it in presenti. At one time it was considered, that where a man was under the erroneous belief that he had made an actual gift of property, equity would construe that as evidence that he considered himself a trustee of it for the donee. It will, however, be seen from the illustrations given below that this view can no longer be supported. For the fact that a person supposes that he has denuded himself of property cannot reasonably be accepted as evidence that he considered himself a trustee

Art. 8. of it. On the contrary, it is inconsistent with any such theory; for a man cannot at the same time believe that he has given away property, and yet that he holds it upon trust for another. In short, the intention to confer a voluntary benefit is not sufficient; there must be either a benefit actually conferred by a legal transmutation of the thing given from the donor to the donee, or to a trustee for the donee, or else evidence that the donor actually constituted himself a trustee of the property for the donee, which evidence is afforded either by the declarations of the donor, or from a course of conduct showing that he considered himself in the position of a trustee.

Trusts based on value.

With regard, however, to trusts based on valuable consideration, equity will enforce them, at the suit of a person privy to that consideration, wherever an intention to create a trust, whether in the present or the future, appears. For equity considers that to be done which ought to be done; and the settlor, having received value for the creation of a trust, will be made to carry out his bargain according to the intention of the parties, however informally that intention may have been expressed, and even although no trustee has been named. For the court will never allow a trust to fail for want of a trustee, but will, if the parties have used language sufficiently explicit to enable the court to gather their intentions, fasten the trust on the estate, and, if necessary, appoint active trustees to carry it out.

enforce, unless privy to the consideration.

Even, however, where value is given, an inchoate trust will only be enforced at the instance of a person privy thereto; and, notwithstanding some dicta which seem to indicate a contrary view, it is believed that there is no authority for supposing that a person who is made party to a mere contract for a settlement, but who is not privy to the consideration, can enforce it (p). Where, however, a person privy to the consideration seeks to enforce an executory trust, the court will enforce it not only in his favour, but in favour of all parties, volunteers included. Art. 8.

It was, until quite recently, considered, that the children of a widow, who, on a second marriage, made or procured a settlement in their favour, became privy to the valuable consideration of the marriage, and could enforce the performance of a covenant or incompleted trust (g). Moreover, in Clarke v. Wright (r), some of the judges in the Exchequer Chamber went so far as to extend the marriage consideration to all relatives of an intended wife, and even to the relatives of an intended husband where he was not the settlor, on the ground that a benefit to these relatives must have formed part of the marriage bargain. It is difficult to see, however, how these persons could have been privy to the consideration, although the bargain between husband and wife was a bargain founded on value; and by a recent decision of the Privy Council (s), Clarke v. Wright was expressly overruled. In giving judgment, Lord SELBORNE said (speaking of the decision in Clarke v. Wright): "It is apparent that the court proceeded upon the view that the case of Newstead v. Searles (t) was an authority for the proposition that a settlement by a widow about to marry, upon her children by a former marriage, is good against a subsequent mortgagee, putting it in that general way without any reference to more special reasons." His lordship then proceeded to show that Newstead v. Searles and other cases were in reality no authorities for that proposition, and on that ground expressly overruled Clarke v. Wright. It is, therefore, apprehended that although their lordships did not express their dissent from the case of Gale v. Gale (g), in which that proposition was expressly affirmed by Mr. Justice FRY, they nevertheless have in effect overruled it as well as Clarke v. Wright.

1. In Jeffries v. Jeffries (x), a father voluntarily conveyed freeholds to trustees upon certain trusts in favour of his daughters, and also covenanted to surrender copyholds to the use of the trustees, to be held by them upon the trusts of the settlement. The settlor afterwards died without surrendering the copyholds, having devised certain portions of both freeholds and copyholds to his wife. Upon a suit by the daughters to have the settlement enforced, it was held, that the court would carry out the settlement of the freeholds; for with respect to them the trust was executed, the title of the daughters complete, and the property actually transferred to the trustees. On the other hand, it refused to decree a surrender of the copyholds; for with respect to them, the settlor had neither declared himself a trustee, nor had he transferred them to the trustees, but had merely entered into a voluntary contract to transfer them, which, being a nudum pactum, was of no greater validity in equity than at law (x).

Executed

2. By a marriage settlement, the wife's property was settled (after life estates to the husband and wife), in default of children, in trust for the wife if she should survive the husband; but in the event of the husband surviving the wife, then upon such trusts as the wife should by will appoint, and, in default of appointment, in trust for her next of kin. There was no issue of the marriage, and the wife was past the age of child-bearing, and the husband and wife sought to have the capital of the trust fund paid to them, on the ground that, although the trust was based on value, the next of kin were mere volunteers. The Court of Appeal, however, refused to permit this, JESSEL, M.R., saying: "The fund has been transferred to the trustees. The fact of the next of kin being volunteers, does not enable the trustees to part with it without the consent of their cestuis que trusts. That has been the rule ever since the

 " I assume that this trust would not have been enforced if it were still executory. But this trust is executed, and the next of kin have an interest as cestuis que trusts. It is immaterial that they are volunteers. The trust cannot be broken on that account " (y).

3. In Gilbert v. Overton (z), A., having an agreement for a lease, executed a voluntary settlement assigning all his interest in the agreement to trustees upon certain trusts. Voluntary transmutation of equitable interests.
 It was objected that he had not declared himself a trustee, nor intended to declare himself one, and had not conveyed the leasehold premises to the trustees ; but Vice-Chancellor Wood said : " In the inception of this transaction, there is nothing to show that the settlor had the power of obtaining a lease, before the time when he did so, after the execution of the settlement. There is, therefore, nothing to show that the settlor did not, by the settlement, do all that it was in his power to do to pass the property."

4. In Kekewich v. Manning (a), residuary personal estate was bequeathed to a mother for life, with remainder to her daughter absolutely. The daughter, on her marriage, assigned all her interest under the will to trustees upon certain trusts, not material to be stated, with a final trust in favour of her nieces. Although, qua the nieces, the settlement was voluntary, it was held that it was good, on the ground that the daughter had done all she could to divest herself of her interest under the will. For she had a mere equitable remainder, and the only way in which she could transfer it was by assignment. If she had been the legal owner of the fund it would have been necessary for her to transfer it in the proper way in the books of the bank ; but not being the legal owner, she did all she could do to transfer it (b).

(b) The chief difficulty is to determine what is a complete assignment and what is not. See Donaldson v. Donaldson, Kay, 711 ; Edwards v. Jones, 1 My. & Cr. 226 ; and Pearson v. Amicable Assurance Co., 27 Beav. 229 ; and Fortescue v. Barnett, 3 My. & K. 36 ; Sewell v. King, 14 Ch. D. 179 ; Harding v. Harding, 17 Q. B. D. 442 ; Nanney v. Morgan, 37 Ch. Art. 8. 5. So, again, where one effects a policy on his life, under the terms of which the money is to be paid to his children unless he shall otherwise appoint by will, the children obtain complete equitable rights subject to be defeated by the exercise of the power; for there is nothing more to be done by the settlor. In short, the assignment is made in the policy itself instead of by a subsequent deed (c).

Debts assigned, but subsequently got in by settlor.

6. In Bizzey v. Flight (d), A. (inter alia) assigned certain mortgage debts to trustees upon certain trusts. The settlement, however, contained no transfer of the mortgage securities. A. subsequently received the money due on some of the mortgages, the trustees receiving the money due on others. It was held by HALL, V.-C., that as the mortgaged property was not transferred to the trustees, the settlement was essentially incomplete, and, being a voluntary settlement, was void. In a more recent case before the Court of Appeal, however (e), in which the only difference was that the mortgage was a bill of sale of chattels, the court held that the settlement was complete and binding, and threw some doubt on the correctness of the decision in Bizzey v. Flight. It appears, however, that their lordships distinguished the two cases on the ground that a bill of sale was different to a mortgage of land, in which a transferee of the debt would be unable to give a receipt for the money unless he could re-convey the mortgaged property, whereas, on payment of a bill of sale, no re-assignment of the mortgaged chattels is required.

Declaration of trust implied from conduct.

7. A testator bequeathed £2,000 on certain trusts, and he empowered his executor (who was also his residuary legatee) to retain the amount in his hands uninvested, paying interest thereon at four per cent. per annum. After the testator's death, the executor, being satisfied that the testator intended to bequeath £3,000, and not £2,000, said to the legatee's father: "It shall make no difference, and

I will take care that he (the legatee) shall have £1,000 more than he is entitled to by the will." Subsequently he signed a memorandum in these words: "By the will, etc., of the late S. G. the said J. G. (the executor) pays to T. W. (the legatee), the annual sum of £120 by two equal payments, viz., the 6th July and the 6th January in each year, being interest at four per cent. on £3,000." He also signed a further memorandum, stating that he had told the legatee that he should make the £2,000 up to £3,000; and down to his death he in fact paid interest on the £3,000. On these facts, it was held that the executor had effectually declared himself a trustee of the additional thousand (f).

8. Again, a testatrix gave her personal estate to B. for the benefit of B.'s daughters. B. invested the produce, together with £1,000 of his own moneys, in stock in his own name, and afterwards treated and admitted the aggregate fund as held in trust for his daughters. On his death the fund was found mixed with like funds of his own. It was held that, under the circumstances, there was sufficient to show that B. considered himself a trustee of the £1,000 in favour of his daughters (g).

9. In Ex parte Dubost (h), the alleged settlor wrote to an agent in Paris, authorising him to purchase (and the agent accordingly did purchase) an annuity for the benefit of a lady whom he named; but as the lady was married, and also deranged, the annuity was purchased in the name of the settlor. The settlor then sent the agent a power of attorney, authorising him to transfer the annuity to the lady, which he did not do till after the settlor's death. It was nevertheless held, that the settlor had considered himself a mere trustee for the lady, and had never intended the annuity for himself, but for her, and that therefore the trust was good.

Art. 8.

Imperfect gift not construed as

10. On the other hand, although some judges have held that an instrument executed as a present assignment (but in reality not operative as such) is equivalent to a declaration of trust (i), the balance of authority is unmistakeably the other way, on the ground that an intention to create a trust is essential to the creation of one, and that when a man purports to make a gift or an assignment, he cannot reasonably be supposed to have intended to declare himself a trustee—a character which assumes that he retains the property. Thus in Antrobus v. Smith (k), the alleged settlor made the following endorsement on a share held by him in a public company: “I do hereby assign to my daughter B. all my right, title and interest of and in the enclosed call, and all other calls, in the F. and C. Navigation.” The share was not handed over to the daughter, and the endorsement did not operate as a valid assignment of the share; but it was attempted to enforce the assignment by contending that the endorsement operated as a valid declaration of trust. The court, however, rejected this view, the Master of the Rolls saying: “Mr. Crawford (the alleged settlor) was not in form declared a trustee, nor was that mode of doing what he proposed in his contemplation. . . . He meant a gift, and there is no case in which a party has been compelled to perfect a gift which in the mode of making it he has left imperfect.”

11. Again, a settlor had children by a first wife, and one son (an infant) by a second wife. One day on his return from a journey, the infant's nurse said, “You have come back from Birmingham, and have not brought baby anything"; upon which the settlor answered, "Oh! I gave him a pair of boots, and now I will give him a handsome present." He then went upstairs and brought down a cheque which he had received for £900, and said, "Look you here, I give this to baby; it is for himself; I am going to put it away for him, and will give him a great deal more with it; it is his own, and he may do what he likes with it." He then put the cheque away. He had previously told his solicitor that he intended adding £100 to the cheque, and investing it for the infant's benefit. A few days after the above took place, he suddenly died, leaving the child penniless. The legal right to the cheque could, of course, only pass by indorsement (and no indorsement had been made). It was held that there was nothing more than an inchoate intention to do whatever was necessary to invest the proceeds of the cheque for the child's benefit, and that the father having died before he had carried out his intention, a court of equity could give no aid to the child (l).

D. 113, Vice-Chancellor MALINS. This view has been expressly dissented from by Vice-Chancellor BACON in Warriner v. Rogers, 16 Eq. 340, and by Sir GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in Richards v. Delbridge, 18 Eq. 11, and by Vice-Chancellor HALL in Breton v. Woollven, 17 Ch. D. 416. The decision also seems to be inconsistent with Lord CRANWORTH's judgment in Jones v. Locke, 1 Ch. App. 25, and with Heartley v. Nicholson, 19 Eq. 233, and Re Shield, Pethybridge v. Burrow, 53 L. T. 5, and it is submitted that, both on principle and authority, the law as laid down by the Master of the Rolls in Richards v. Delbridge, is accurate.

(k) 12 Ves. 39. Shares or stocks must be transferred according to the company's regulations (Société Générale v. Walker, 11 App. Cas. 20; Roots v. Williamson, 38 Ch. D. 485; Mutual Provident Society v. Macmillan, 14 App. Cas. 596).

12. So in Milroy v. Lord (m), Lord Justice TURNER laid it down that, "in order to render a voluntary settlement valid and effectual, the settlor must have done everything which, according to the nature of the property comprised in the settlement, was necessary to be done in order to transfer the property, and render the settlement binding upon him. He may, of course, do this by actually transferring the property to the persons for whom he intends to provide, and the provision will then be effectual; and it will be equally effectual if he transfers the property to a trustee for the purposes of the settlement, or declares that he himself holds it in trust for those purposes. But in order to render the settlement binding, one or other of these modes must

Art. 8. (as I understand the law of this court) be resorted to, for there is no equity in this court to perfect an imperfect gift."

13. It was at one time thought that there was an exception (or a seeming exception) to this principle in the case of husband and wife. In Grant v. Grant (n), the Master of the Rolls said: "I apprehend the fact of the transaction taking place between husband and wife, instead of between strangers, makes no difference further than this, that in the case of a gift of chattels from one stranger to another, there must be a delivery of the chattels in order to make the gift complete, whereas in the case of husband and wife there cannot be a delivery, because, assuming they are given to the wife, they still remain in the legal custody of the husband." However, the more recent decision of the late Vice-Chancellor HALL, contra, in Breton v. Woollven (o), has thrown considerable doubt on the soundness of that dictum, and upon the subsequent cases of Badderley v. Badderley (p) and Fox v. Hawkes (q). The point is now of no importance as, by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), gifts made by a husband to a wife are as valid as gifts made by one stranger to another.

Executory trusts based on value not enforceable by persons not privy to consideration.

1. A covenant to settle future acquired property contained in a marriage settlement (i.e., a settlement based on the valuable consideration of marriage), although, of course, enforceable by any person who is privy to the consideration (e.g., the husband, wife, children, or trustees), cannot be enforced by parties who are not so privy, e.g., by the wife's next of kin taking in default of issue (r).

2. Another excellent example of the rule that a contract to create a trust, even where founded on valuable consideration, cannot be enforced by a volunteer, is afforded by the case of Colyear v. Lady Mulgrave (s). There, a father, who had four natural daughters and a legitimate son, entered into an agreement with the son, whereby the father covenanted to transfer the sum of £20,000 to a trustee for the benefit of the four daughters; and the son covenanted to pay the father's debts. The son paid some of the debts, and died before the covenant by the father was performed, having by his will left the father his sole legatee and executor. It was held, that the daughters could not force the father to perform the covenant to settle £20,000 upon them, as, although the son gave value for the father's covenant, the daughters were not privy to that consideration.

3. The above case must, however, be carefully distinguished from cases where the volunteer is not seeking to enforce the covenant against the covenantor, but to enforce the trust in his favour against the trustees, where the covenantor has performed the covenant. Such cases were elaborately discussed in Re Flavell, Murray v. Flavell (t), where it was held that a provision in a partnership deed that a certain annuity should be paid by the surviving partner to the widow of the deceased, was a valid trust; and that as the widow was able as personal representative of the deceased to enforce the covenant against the partner, she was entitled when she received the annuity from him to keep it for herself as beneficiary under the trust. She had not in fact to seek the assistance of a court of equity against the settlor or his representatives.

(y) Prior to the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), debts and other legal choses in action were not assignable at law, on the ground (as put by Lord Coke), that it "would be the occasion of multiplying of contentions and suits, of great oppression of the people, and the subversion of the due and equal execution of justice" (10 Co. 48). But even at law negotiable instruments (as debentures, bills of exchange, and promissory notes made negotiable) were exceptions to the rule; and so were all contracts where a novation took place, that is to say, where both parties to the original contract assented to the transfer of the interest of one of them (Buron v. Husband, 4 B. & Ad. 611). Equity, however, almost always, from its earliest days, disregarded the legal doctrine, and freely enforced contracts for the sale of choses in action; and now, by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 6, contingent and future interests and possibilities, coupled with an interest in real estate, may be granted or assigned at law. But not so possibilities in personal estate, as to which, see Joseph v. Lyons, 15 Q. B. D. 280; and Collyer v. Isaacs, 19 Ch. D. 342. By 30 & 31 Vict. c. 144, policies of life assurance may be legally assigned, and by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 86, a similar relaxation of the law was introduced in favour of marine policies; and finally, by s. 6 of the Judicature Act, 1873, debts and other legal choses in action may be assigned at law, where the assignment is absolute and not by way of charge only.

4. In Wethered v. Wethered (b) an agreement was entered into between two sons, to divide equally whatever property they might receive from their father in his lifetime, or become entitled to under his will, or by descent, or otherwise. It was held that this agreement was binding, although made in respect of a mere possibility, and Vice-Chancellor SHADWELL said: "It is clear that if the testator meant that his devisee should have the personal enjoyment of his bounty, he might so devise as to stint the enjoyment of the devisee, and restrain him from alienating the subject of the gift; but that if the testator did not so devise, it must be intended that he meant that his devisee should not be so stinted, but should have the full enjoyment of the property, and that it should be liable to all his antecedent debts, and all his antecedent contracts; and therefore, that where there was a general devise, the property was liable to be encumbered in any way that the devisee might think proper either before or after he took it" (c). As to the effect of the settlor's bankruptcy before the expectancy vests, however, see Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 47 (2), and Collyer v. Isaacs (c); and s. 16, infra.

Expectancies.

5. Salaries or pensions given for enabling persons to perform duties connected with the public service, or to enable them to be in a fit state of preparation to perform those duties, are inalienable. In Grenfell v. Dean and Canons of Windsor (d), the Master of the Rolls explained the true reasons for this doctrine. In that case, a canon of Windsor had assigned the canonry and the profits to the plaintiff to secure a sum of money. There was no cure of souls, and the only duties were residence within the castle and attendance in the chapel for twenty-one days a-year. In giving judgment for the plaintiff and upholding the assignment, his lordship said: "If he (the canon) had made out that the duty to be performed by him was a public duty, or in any way connected with the public service, I should have thought it right to attend very seriously to that argument, because there are various cases in which public duties are concerned in which it may be against public policy that the income arising from the performance of those duties should be assigned; and for this simple reason, because the public is interested not only in the performance from time to time of the duties, but also in the fit state of preparation of the party having to perform them. Such is the reason in the cases of half-pay, where there is a sort of retainer, and where the payments which are made to officers from time to time are the means by which they—being liable to be called into public service—are enabled to keep themselves in a state of preparation for performing their duties.”

So, in Davis v. Duke of Marlborough (e), the Lord Chancellor said: “A pension for past services may be aliened, but a pension for supporting the grantee in the performance of future duties is inalienable.” The emoluments of ecclesiastical livings were expressly made inalienable by 13 Eliz. c. 20, and 57 Geo. 3, c. 99.

Property
by statute.

6. Some classes of property are expressly made inalienable by statute. Thus, in Davis v. Duke of Marlborough (e), a pension was granted by statute to the duke and his successors in the title “for the more honourable support of the dignities.” It was held, that the object of parliament being, that “it should be kept in mind that it was for a memento and a perpetual memorial of national gratitude for public services,” it was inalienable. Pay, pensions, relief, or allowance payable to any officer of his Majesty’s forces, or to his widow, or to any person on the compassionate list, are also made unassignable by statute (f). So also is the pay of seamen in the navy (g), and half-pay in the marine forces (h); but it would seem that the right to pay actually due at the date of the assignment is assign-

1. Where, with respect to copyhold lands, there is no custom to create an estate tail in the manor of which they are holden, an equitable estate tail cannot be created by way of trust: for that would be inconsistent with the tenure (in other words, with the conditions) under which the lands are holden (l). But, on the other hand, where a trust is not inconsistent with the custom of a manor, it will be valid, although legal estates to the same extent could not be created (m). Perpetuities. 1. It is against public policy that property should be settled on special trusts for an indefinite period, so as to prevent it being freely dealt with ; and consequently, the power of doing so has been curtailed by a rule known as where a trust is void under the rule against perpetuities, subsequent remainders are valid, and are merely accelerated. the rule against perpetuities. That rule is, that every future limitation, whether by way of executory devise, or trust of real or personal property, the vesting of which absolutely as to personalty, or in fee or tail as to realty, is postponed beyond lives in being and twenty-one years afterwards (with a further period for gestation where it exists), is void (y). This rule does not, however, apply to interests following estates tail, as they can be barred (z); nor to charitable bequests (a); nor to parliamentary grants for distinguished services; nor to trusts for the accumulation of income for payment of the settlor's debts (b). It is impossible within the scope of this work to go into the numerous questions which arise under this rule, for the elucidation of which the reader is referred to Mr. Lewis's learned Treatise on Perpetuities. All that need be said here is, that in considering whether limitations or trusts offend against the rule (or are in legal language "too remote"), possible events are to be considered. If the trust may in any event be too remote, it will be void, notwithstanding that in the events which have actually happened it would have vested within the prescribed period. In short, to be good, the limitation must be one of which, at its creation, it could be predicted that it must necessarily vest within the prescribed period (c). It may also be mentioned, that if the vice of remoteness affect an unascertained number of members of a class, it affects the class as a whole. Thus, where a trust is for A. for life, and after her death for her children who may attain twenty-one, and the issue per stirpes of such of them as shall die under age, which issue shall attain twenty-one, the whole of the limitations after the life estate of A. are void. But a trust to apply the income for a period, which may or may not exceed the limit allowed by the rule, is good, although the ultimate gift of the corpus may be bad. See Re Wise, *Jackson v. Where there is a valid trust, with a gift over in certain contingencies, which is void for remoteness, the valid trust remains unaffected (e). All remainders after a gift void for remoteness are themselves void (f).

The Thellusson Act.

2. At common law, the power of tying up money so as to accumulate at compound interest, was co-extensive with the period for which property might be tied up under the rule against perpetuities; viz., during any number of lives in being, and twenty-one years afterwards. The late Mr. Thellusson having, by his will, directed his personalty to be invested in land, and the rents of the land so bought and of his other real estate to be accumulated during the lives of all his descendants living at his death (g), the attention of Parliament was called to the unreasonable nature of such a power. Accordingly, by the statute 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98 (commonly known as the Thellusson Act), the period allowed by the common law for accumulations was further restricted to the life or lives of the grantor or grantors, settlor or settlors; or (not and) twenty-one years from the death of any grantor, settlor, devisor, or testator; or during the minorities of any persons who shall be living, or en ventre sa mere, at the time of the death of the grantor, settlor, devisor, or testator; or during the minorities of any persons who, under the instrument directing the accumulation, would for the time being, if of full age, be entitled to the income directed to be accumulated. The statute, however, does not extend to any provision for payment of debts, or for raising portions for the children of the settlor, grantor, or devisor, or of any person taking any interest under the instrument directing such accumulations; nor to any direction as to the produce of timber upon any lands; nor to a trust or direction for keeping property in repair (h). It might perhaps be thought that by analogy to the action of the courts with regard to trusts which transgress the common law period, a trust which endeavoured to go beyond the period allowed by the statute would be wholly void; but this is not so. The statute is merely prohibitory of accumulations going beyond the period prescribed by it, and being in derogation of a common law right, is construed strictly. Consequently, as accumulations which exceed that period, but are within the common law period, are not contrary to public policy as defined by common law, such a trust is good pro tanto (i). If, however, the trust is to accumulate beyond the common law period, it is altogether void (k).

Art. 10.

3. In 1892 the period allowed by the Thellusson Act was further restricted where the accumulation is to be made either wholly or partially for the purchase of land only, to the minority or respective minorities of any person or persons who, under the instrument directing the accumulations, "would for the time being (if of full age) be entitled to receive the rents, issues, profits, or income so directed to be accumulated" (l). The wording of the Act is not free from criticism, for if it be construed literally it could never be effectual, inasmuch as under the instrument directing an accumulation beyond minority, there would be no person entitled, if of full age, to the rents, issues, profits, or income. It is apprehended, however, that just as "testamentary grammar" is looked upon with indulgence, the same lenient treatment must be accorded to this and other eccentricities of parliamentary drafting, and that the true meaning is sufficiently obvious. It is also apprehended that on the analogy of the Thellusson Act, an instrument contravening the new statute would only be void as to the excess, and not void altogether.

against policy
law.

1. A trust, with a proviso that the interest of the cestui que trust shall not be liable to the claims of creditors, is void so far as the proviso is concerned; and if it can be ascertained that the cestui que trust was intended to take a vested interest, the mode in which, or the time when, he was to reap the benefit, is immaterial, and the entire interest may either be disposed of by the act of the cestui que trust, or may enure for the benefit of his creditors under the operation of the bankruptcy law (m). The question generally depends upon whether, on the decease of the cestui que trust, his executors would have a right to call upon the trustees retrospectively to account for the arrears (n). Of course, however, a trust to A. until he becomes bankrupt, or alienates the property, and then over to B. is good (o), and may even take effect in respect of alienations preceding the first instrument (p); but a man cannot make a settlement upon himself until bankruptcy, and then over (q), not even by an ante-nuptial marriage settlement (where it might fairly be urged to be part of the wife's terms of the marriage bargain); for the express object of such a trust is to cheat his creditors, which is, of course, an illegal purpose, and therefore void (r).

policy of the law, and are therefore void (s); with the single exception that trusts limiting the power of married women to alienate their separate property during coverture are regarded as valid. Art. 10

1. Where a man, by deed, creates a trust in favour of future illegitimate children (putting aside the objection as to want of certainty in the cestuis que trusts), the trust will be void, as being contrary to public policy, and conducive to immorality (t). Similarly, a trust by will in favour of the future illegitimate children of another, would clearly be a direct encouragement to such other to continue his illicit intercourse after the testator's death, and would therefore be void (u). Trusts for future illegitimate children.

The same objection does not, however, apply to the case of a testator creating a trust by will in favour of his own future bastards. Thus, in Occleston v. Fullalove (x), a testator by his will gave a share of the proceeds of his residuary estate to his reputed children, Catherine and Edith, "and all other children which I may have, or be reputed to have, by the said M. L., now born, or hereafter to be born." This gift in favour of future-born children was held valid; Lord Justice MELLISH saying: "In the present case, the will being the will of the putative father himself, it is impossible that it can encourage an immoral intercourse after his death. If the bequest is to be held to be contrary to public policy, it must be because it tended to promote an immoral intercourse in his lifetime. There was no evidence that M. L. knew that the will was made; and if she did know it, she must also have known that it could be revoked at any moment."

deeds.

2. A trust to take effect upon the future separation of a husband and wife is void, as being contrary to public morals (y); but a trust in reference to an immediate separation, already agreed upon, is good and enforceable (z). If, however, the separation does not in fact take place, the trust becomes wholly void (a). The reason of this is at once obvious, when we consider that a provision for husband or wife, to take effect upon a future separation, is a direct encouragement to misconduct which may result in a separation; whereas, when a separation is actually agreed on—when both parties have decided that they will no longer remain together—there can be no encouragement to marital misconduct in agreeing to the distribution of their income in a particular manner and for their mutual benefit and advantage.

1. Where property is settled in trust for a woman for life with an executory gift over if she marry a man with an income of less than £500 a year (b), or if she marry any person of a particular trade (c), the gift over is bad, as its object, as gathered from its probable result (d), is to restrain marriage altogether. If, however, the trust over is to take effect only upon the first beneficiary marrying a particular person, it would be good, as it would not be in general restraint of marriage (e).

2. Moreover, the rule does not apply to second marriages. Thus where (f) a person, by her will, gave her residuary estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the income to her nephew and his wife (the testatrix's niece) for their joint lives and the life of the survivor, with a gift over (in the event of the nephew surviving and marrying again) in trust for other persons, it was held that the gift over was good. MELLISH, L.J., in delivering his judgment after stating the general rule, said: "We are to consider how does that rule apply to second marriages? It has never been decided that it applies to second marriages.

. . . It appears to me very obvious that, if it is regarded as a matter of policy, there may be very essential distinctions between a first and a second marriage. At any rate there is this, that in the case of a second marriage, whether of a man or a woman, the person who makes the gift may have been influenced by his friendship towards the wife in the one case, and towards the husband in the other case. That is to say, regarding the case of some member of the husband's family, he may make a gift to the husband for life, and then make a gift to the wife because she is the wife of that particular husband, and because he thinks it is more for the benefit of the children that the wife should have the money while the children are young, rather than that the children should have it."

3. But although conditional or executory gifts over divesting an estate on marriage are void if the probable effect would be to discourage marriage altogether, yet by a curious hair-splitting, it seems to be well established that a trust in favour of a person until marriage and then over is perfectly good. As was said by WIGRAM, V.-C., in Morley v. Reynoldson (g): "Until I heard the argument of this case, I had certainly understood, that without doubt, where property was limited to a person until she married, and when she married then over, the limitation was good. It is difficult to understand how this could be otherwise, for in such a case there is nothing to give an interest beyond marriage. If you suppose the case of a gift of a certain interest, and that interest sought to be abridged by a condition, you may strike out the condition and leave the original gift in operation; but if the gift is until marriage,

Art. 10. there is nothing to carry the gift beyond the marriage. . . . I am satisfied from an examination of the authorities that a gift until marriage, and when the party marries then over, is a valid limitation." Whether this somewhat refined distinction between executory gifts over on marriage and gifts until marriage would now be upheld if attacked may perhaps be doubted from the language used by the late Lord Justice JAMES in Allen v. Jackson (h), where he showed a tendency to construe gifts over, as being really gifts until the prohibited event should happen.

The only written evidence of the alleged trust was contained in letters signed by the defendant. In giving judgment, Lord ALVANLEY said : "It was contended for the defendants that there is great danger in taking a declaration of trust arising from letters loosely speaking of trusts, which might or might not be actually and definitely settled between the parties with such expressions as 'our,' 'your,' etc., intimating some intention of a trust ; that upon such grounds the court may be called upon to execute a trust in a manner very different from that intended, and that it is

It is not required by the statute that a trust should be created by a writing . . . but that it shall be manifested and proved by writing; plainly meaning that there should be evidence in writing, proving that there was such a trust."

1. But where the trust is testamentary, that is to say, only intended to operate after death, the trust must, in the absence of fraud, be contained in a duly executed or attested will or codicil. Thus, in Re Boyes, Boyes v. Carritt (t), a testator, who died in 1882, made a will devising and bequeathing all his property to the defendant Carritt, and appointing him sole executor. Mr. Carritt, who was the solicitor of the testator and drew the will, gave evidence to the effect that the intention of the testator was that he should hold the property as trustee for objects of the testator's bounty, who were to be afterwards indicated by him. No direction, however, on the subject was given by the testator in his lifetime, but after his death two letters were found, written by him to Mr. Carritt, and sealed up, in both of which he expressed a desire that Mr. Carritt should have £25 to buy a trinket in memory of him, and that all the rest of the property should go to a lady named Brown. Under these circumstances, it being clear that Mr. Carritt was a trustee, the question was whether the trust for the lady, Mrs. Brown, was valid and effectual, or whether he was a constructive trustee for the next of kin. Mr. Justice KAY, after examining the authorities, came to the conclusion that, as the law stood, if a trust was not declared by a testator when his will was made, then, in order to make the trust binding, it was essential that it should be communicated to the devisee or legatee in the testator's lifetime, and that he should accept that particular trust. A devisee or legatee could not, by accepting an indefinite trust of this kind, enable a testator to make an unattested codicil. His lordship regretted that the trust should fail, but he was bound to declare, Mr. Carritt having admitted himself to be a trustee, that the trust was for the next of kin. The reader must, in reading this case, bear in mind that Mr. Carritt admitted that he knew, when he prepared the will, that he was not meant to take beneficially, and therefore, of course, it would have been personal fraud on his part if he had claimed to do so. If, however, he had not known the non-beneficial nature of the bequest, the subsequent letters of the testator would not have been sufficient to have deprived Mr. Carritt of the beneficial interest, and consequently neither Mrs. Brown nor the next of kin would have taken anything. Whether, however, Mr. Carritt had or had not known, when the will was made, that he was only intended to take as trustee, yet, if the testator had subsequently communicated to him that he was not to take beneficially, and had either declared specific trusts of the property, or had simply said that he had not yet made up his mind upon what trusts it should be held, and if Mr. Carritt had expressly assented to act as trustee, then, as

Art. 11. his assent would have operated to induce the testator not to alter his will, Mr. Carritt would have been bound to take the property as trustee simply, and to carry out the testator's intention (as in the 1st illustration to paragraph (4), infra), or to hold the property as under a resulting trust, if no intention had been declared.

2. A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate upon trust for sale, and upon further trust to pay the proceeds to his friends A. and B. in equal shares. And he declared that he bequeathed such proceeds "to the said A. and B., their executors, administrators and assigns, absolutely, in the full confidence that they would carry out his wishes in respect thereof." A. and B. survived the testator, but died before the distribution of the estate. On these facts, it was held by CHITTY, J., that parol evidence was inadmissible that the testator had communicated his wishes verbally to one of the two legatees, and that as (apart from such evidence) the precatory words were not sufficient to create a trust, A. and B. took the proceeds of the residue absolutely (u).

Fraud an exception to rule.

1. But where a father is induced not to make a will by statements of his heir presumptive that the latter would make suitable provision for his immediate relatives, the court considers that that is a fraud, and, notwithstanding the statute, will oblige the heir to make a provision in conformity with his implied obligation (x). For (as was said by Lord WESTBURY, in McCormick v. Grogan (y)), "the court

(y) 4 H. L. 82. The American courts follow the English with regard to the admissibility of parol evidence in cases of fraud generally, but in Bedillon v. Seaton, 3 Wall. junr. 279, a distinction was taken between cases like McCormick v. Grogan, where a father was fraudulently induced not to make a will, and cases like those cited below, where a testator was fraudulently induced either to make or to abstain from revoking a will. In the former case the American court differed from ours, holding that no trust could be enforced on the heir, who merely took by descent or operation of law, although, in the latter class of cases, where the trustee ex maleficio had procured a devise or bequest for himself, it was admitted that the trust could be proved by parol. It would seem, too, that the American courts will not enforce has, from a very early period, decided, that even an Act of Parliament shall not be used as an instrument of fraud; and if in the machinery of effectuating a fraud an Act of Parliament intervenes, a court of equity does not, it is true, set aside the Act of Parliament, but it fastens upon the individual who gets a title under that Act, and imposes upon him a personal obligation, because he applies the Act as an instrument for accomplishing a fraud. In this way a court of equity has dealt with the Statute of Frauds, and in this manner also it deals with the Statute of Wills. And if an individual on his death-bed, or at any other time, is persuaded by his heir-at-law or next of kin to abstain from making a will, or if the same individual, having made a will, communicates the disposition to the person on the face of the will benefited by that disposition, but at the same time says to that individual that he has a purpose to answer which he has not expressed in the will, but which he depends upon the donee to carry into effect, and the donee assents to it (either expressly or by any mode of action which the donee knows must give to the testator the impression and belief that he fully assents to the request), then undoubtedly the heir-at-law in one case, and the donee in the other, will be converted into trustees; simply on the principle that an individual shall not be benefited by his own personal fraud."

2. "The authorities establish the following propositions: Fraud by one of two joint legatees.
If A. induces B. either to make or to abstain from revoking a will leaving him property, by expressly promising or tacitly consenting to carry out B.'s wishes concerning it, the court will hold this to be a trust, and will compel A. to execute it: see McCormick v. Grogan (2), where Lord HATHERLEY says: 'but this doctrine evidently requires to be carefully restricted within proper limits. It is in itself a doctrine which involves a wide departure from the policy which induced the legislature to pass the Statute of Frauds, and it is only in clear cases of fraud that this doctrine has been applied in cases in which the court has been persuaded a mere promise by a legatee unless there was actual fraud or undue influence (see Satter v. Bird, 103 Pa. St. 403; Raydale v. Raydale, 68 Miss. 92), whereas our courts would seem to infer fraud from the breach of such a promise.

(2) Id. supra.

Art. 11. that there has been a fraudulent inducement held out on the part of the apparent beneficiary in order to lead the testator to confide to him the duty which he so undertook to perform.' If A. induces B. either to make, or to leave unrevoked, a will leaving property to A. and C. as tenants in common, by expressly promising, or tacitly consenting, that he and C. will carry out the testator's wishes, and C. knows nothing of the matter until after A.'s death, A. is bound, but C. is not bound (a); the reason stated being, that to hold otherwise would enable one beneficiary to deprive the rest of their benefits by setting up a secret trust. If, however, the gift were to A. and C. as joint tenants, the authorities have established a distinction between those cases in which the will is made on the faith of an antecedent promise by A., and those in which the will is left unrevoked on the faith of a subsequent promise. In the former case, the trust binds both A. and C. (b), the reason stated being that no person can claim an interest under a fraud committed by another; in the latter case, A. and not C. is bound (c), the reason stated being that the gift is not tainted with any fraud in procuring the execution of the will" (d).

inter vivos.

3. The rule as to admissibility of parol evidence where there is fraud, is equally applicable to cases where one has fraudulently induced the execution of a conveyance. Therefore, where the plaintiff purported to assign to the defendant an agreement for a lease absolutely, but there appeared to have been a parol collateral arrangement that the defendant should hold part of the premises in trust for the plaintiff, it was held that such a trust could be proved by parol evidence; for (assuming the arrangement to have been in fact made) to exclude parol evidence would operate to effectuate a fraud (e).

Practically speaking, an infant cannot now effectually ^{Infants.} dispose of property so as to bind himself; and, therefore, cannot, except under the statute next mentioned, make an irrevocable settlement. However, males over the age of twenty, and females over the age of seventeen years can now, upon marriage or afterwards (b), with the approbation of the High Court (acting in pursuance of the power given to it by the statute 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43, explained by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 83), make binding settlements of real and personal estate belonging to them in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy. Married women.

2. Women married since December 31st, 1882, are in the same position with regard to their beneficial interest in property as spinsters (d). They can, therefore, create trusts in relation to it, either by act inter vivos, or by testamentary disposition. Women married prior to that date are in the same position with regard to any property as to which their title first accrued (whether as a possessory or a reversionary title (e)) since December 31st, 1882. With regard to other married women, they can only alienate (and therefore can only create trusts) in the following cases, viz.: (1) where they are donees of a power of appointment (f); (2) where the property is settled to their separate use (g) without restraint on anticipation; (3) where the property is their separate property under the repealed Married Women's Property Act of 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93); (4) where the property is real estate, and their husbands join in an acknowledged deed; (5) where the property is reversionary personalty, their title to which is derived under an instrument (other than their marriage settlement) executed after December 31st, 1857, and their husbands join in an acknowledged deed (h).

Corporations. 3. Prior to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, municipal corporations were able to create trusts of their property (i); but since that Act corporations included in the schedule to it are themselves made trustees of their property for public purposes, and consequently cannot create trusts of it (k).

4. It is clear that a lunatic cannot create either a testamentary trust, or a trust inter vivos in favour of volunteers (l). On the other hand, where a person who is a lunatic in fact, but is not known to be so to persons privy to valuable consideration, executes a settlement for valuable consideration, it would seem that the settlement would not be set aside, either at law or in equity (m). It must, however, be borne in mind that a lunatic is incapable of contracting a valid marriage, and that, consequently, a settlement executed by a lunatic in consideration of an intended marriage could not be said to be a settlement based on value. No doubt such cases inflict intolerable hardship on a woman who has gone through the ceremony of marriage with a lunatic without knowledge of his incapacity; but as such a marriage has never in the eyes of the law taken place, a trust to take effect on or after the marriage fails, because the contingency on which it is to commence never happens. The case in fact would come under the principle which has been applied to settlements made in consideration of marriage with a deceased wife's sister (n).

5. A convict (i.e., one sentenced to death or penal servitude for treason or felony (o)) is incapable, until the expiration of his sentence, or until his death (p), of alienating or charging his property; and therefore he is incapable of declaring a trust of it, at all events by act inter vivos. This incapacity, however, is suspended for any period during which the convict may be at large under a ticket of leave (q).

Art. 13.ART. 13.—Who may be Beneficiaries.

(1) Every person who is capable of holding property may lawfully be a beneficiary of it under a trust (r).

(2) A trust (which is not a charitable trust (s)) to perform certain duties which are of no benefit to any human being, is (semble) not enforceable (t), although it may be valid if the trustee desires to perform it, unless it transgresses the rule against perpetuities (u). If the trustee does not perform it there is a resulting trust of the unapplied property in favour of the settlor or his representatives.

Corporations. 1. A corporation cannot be cestui que trust of lands without licence under the Mortmain Acts; for without such licence it cannot hold lands, and therefore cannot take through the medium of a trust. There are, however, numerous statutory exceptions to this in relation to municipal corporations, incorporated trading companies, colleges and the like too numerous to mention in this work.

Aliens. 2. Similarly, before the Act 33 Vict. c. 14, an alien, as he could hold property against everyone except the Crown, could also be a beneficiary of land as against everyone except the Crown (x). But as he could not take a legal estate by operation of law, so likewise he could not be a beneficiary by act of law (y). As the above Act is not retrospective, it would seem that aliens who acquired lands anterior to the passing of the Act, are not protected by it, and that the Crown is entitled to all lands of which they are beneficiaries (z). Art. 13.

3. Although, by recent legislation, married women are as capable of holding property as other people, they were not, previous to 1883, in so favourable a position. At common law, the husband was entitled to all his wife's personal chattels in possession; to the rents and profits of her freeholds during their joint lives; to all her choses in action which he should reduce into possession during the marriage; and to all her leaseholds. But if he did not reduce the choses in action into possession, or dispose of the leaseholds during the marriage, they reverted to the wife if she survived him. Courts of equity, however, in this instance, did not follow the law, but invented that peculiar equitable estate known as a "separate use." Property, therefore, which is settled in trust for a woman for her separate use, is freed from the jus mariti; and with regard to it a married woman is regarded as a feme sole. She may dispose of it without her husband's consent, either by act inter vivos, or by will (a), unless she be by the trust restrained from anticipation. In the latter case she cannot dispose of it at all without the sanction of the court, which may, however, be obtained where it is clearly for her benefit, on summons under s. 39 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41).

Art 13. trusts are not void, and that the trustees may safely spend the money on the prescribed object if they please (b). The judge added, that he knew of nothing to prevent a gift of a sum of money to trustees, upon trust to apply it for the repair of such a monument, if he took care to limit the time for which the trust was to last, so as to provide for its cesser within the limits fixed by the rule against perpetuities. Where, however, a testator creates a trust for the repair of tombs or monuments, without limiting its continuance in accordance with such rule, it will be absolutely void for remoteness (c). On the other hand, a similar indefinite trust for keeping a church or churchyard in repair, would be valid, as it would be considered a charitable trust in favour of the congregation of the church, and the rule against perpetuities does not apply to charitable trusts (d). It has also been recently decided, that a testator may make a gift to a charity conditionally upon their keeping his tomb in repair, with a gift over to another charity in the event of the tomb being allowed to fall into disrepair (e).

2. The American courts have held that a trust to keep in repair for ever the tombs of a class (e.g., the testator's family) is a charitable trust and valid, although a similar trust to keep up the tomb of an individual is not ; but the distinction seems somewhat fantastic (f).

On the same principles a trust, limited in point of time within the rule against perpetuities, to apply money for keeping specified pet animals in comfort during their lives, is perfectly legal, although no person could enforce it (g). Moreover, dogs and horses and other domestic animals are considered so useful to man, that it is settled that a charitable trust of undefined continuance may be established in their favour (h). Moreover, CHITTY, J., held that antivivisection societies are charities on the ground that their object (whether rightly or wrongly) was the prevention of cruelty to animals useful to man (i).

Art. 13.

3. On the other hand where directions are given to trustees to manage property in a particular way for no one's benefit, it would seem that the trust is absolutely void, and that the person entitled to the property by law can claim it at once as if the trust had never been declared. Thus, where a house was devised to trustees in trust to block up windows and doors for twenty years, and at the end of that period upon trust to convey it to A. in fee, it was held that the first trust was void, and that the heir-at-law took the house during the twenty years (k). So in America it has been held that a trust to keep a favourite clock of the testator in repair was void (l). It is, however, difficult in principle to distinguish these cases from those relating to the keeping up of tombs, unless it be on the ground that the keeping of a tomb is not a misuse of property, whereas the shutting up of a house which might otherwise be useful to mankind is contrary to the policy of the law. The whole of the cases relating to this question require to be reviewed by the House of Lords before any intelligible principle can be extracted from them.

ART. 14.—When Voidable for Failure of Consideration, Mistake, or Fraud.

(1) The Court will cancel a trust at the suit of the settlor or his representatives (m), if :—

- (a) the very object with which the trust was created has ceased to exist (n) ; or
- (b) the settlement was executed in ignorance or mistake as to its effect (o) ; or
- (c) fraud or undue influence has been exercised to induce the settlor to create the trust (p) ;

(2) Provided the settlor has not (in the two latter cases) acquiesced in or acted upon the settlement after the influence has ceased, or after he has become aware of the legal effect of it (q) ; and that the status of the parties has not been irrevocably altered as part of the transaction (r).

As stated in Article 8 (supra), where a trust has once been perfected or declared, and does not rest in fieri, the court will enforce it against the settlor and his representatives, notwithstanding that it may have been entirely voluntary on his part. But although that is so, a trust, like a contract, will be cancelled in Equity for fraud, mistake, or total failure of the object for which it was created.

Art. 14.

For some years, indeed until quite recently, it was considered that, where a trust was voluntary, and the settlor invoked the aid of the court to set it aside, the onus was immediately cast on the beneficiaries of showing that all the provisions of the settlement were proper and usual, or, that if there were any unusual provisions, they were brought to the knowledge of, and were understood by, the settlor(s). In particular, the absence of a power of revocation was considered to be fatal unless it could be conclusively shown that the settlor had been advised to insert one, and had deliberately elected not to do so (t). This view was, however, dissented from by the Court of Appeal in Hall v. Hall (u), and by the late Sir GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in Dutton v. Thompson (x), and appears to be no longer law. In the latter case the late Master of the Rolls said: "I emphatically disagree with the ground on which some judges have set aside voluntary settlements, namely, that there were provisions in them which were not proper to be inserted in such settlements. It is not the province of a Court of Justice to decide on what terms or conditions a man of competent understanding may choose to dispose of his property. If he thoroughly understands what he is about, it is not the duty of a Court of Justice to set aside a settlement which he chooses to execute, on the ground that it contains clauses which are not proper. No doubt if the settlement were shown to contain provisions so absurd and improvident that no reasonable person would have consented to them, or if provisions were omitted that no reasonable persons would have allowed to be omitted, that is an argument that he did not understand the settlement. But in no other way would it be a reason for setting it aside." In Henry v. Armstrong (y) KAY, J., said: "No doubt there are to be found in the reported cases, dicta to the effect that the onus of supporting a voluntary deed rests upon those who set it up; but I do not think that these

(x) 23 Ch. D. 278.

(y) 18 Ch. D. 668. The authorities are by no means satisfactory as to the question of onus.

Art. 14. dicta go so far as to say, that whenever a voluntary settlement is impeached on any ground whatever, the onus is at once thrown on those who would maintain it. As I understand it, the law is, that anybody of full age and sound mind, who has executed a voluntary deed by which he has denuded himself of his own property, is bound by his own act; and if he comes to have the deed set aside—especially if he comes a long time afterwards—he must prove some substantial reason why the deed should be set aside.” This remark as to onus is in apparent conflict with a dictum of the late Lord HATHERLEY in Phillips v. Mullings (z), where his lordship said: “It is clear that anyone taking any advantage under a voluntary deed, and setting it up against the donor, must show that he thoroughly understood what he was doing.” It is, however, respectfully apprehended that Lord Justice KAY’s dictum is quite consistent with Lord HATHERLEY’S; for the latter merely said that where the beneficiaries set up the deed against the donor, the onus is upon the beneficiaries; while the Lord Justice said, that where the settlor asks to have the deed set aside, the onus is upon him. In short, the onus is, in general, upon the person seeking relief, unless the beneficiary occupied a fiduciary position towards the settlor. The cases of Dutton v. Thompson, Henry v. Armstrong, and Phillips v. Mullings, coupled with Hall v. Hall (above cited) must, it is submitted, be taken to have definitely overruled the previous decisions in Coutts v. Acworth (a), Wollaston v. Tribe (a), and Everitt v. Everitt (a), and to have left the onus of showing mistake, fraud, or undue influence upon the settlor in all cases, except those in which the provisions of the settlement are so absurd as to raise a presumption that no sane person would have agreed to them knowingly, and except cases in which the beneficiary occupied at the date of the settlement a fiduciary position towards the settlor, in which latter there is a strong prima facie presumption of undue influence which casts the onus of supporting the settlement on the beneficiary (b).

1. In the recent case of Essery v. Cowlard (c), by a settlement executed in 1877, in consideration of a then intended marriage, it was declared that a sum of stock, which had been transferred by the intended wife to trustees, should be held by them on trust for her benefit and that of the intended husband, and the issue of the intended marriage.
 The marriage was not solemnized, but the parties cohabited without marriage, and three children were born. In 1883 an action was brought by the father and mother of these children against the trustees to have it set aside; and it was held that the contract to marry having been absolutely put an end to, the court could cancel the settlement. A similar decision was arrived at in the more recent case of Bond v. Walford (d), where an intended marriage had been simply broken off.

1. Although a voluntary trust will not be set aside or varied for the mere asking, yet where the settlor can show that he misunderstood the effect of it, relief will be given to him. In the recent case of James v. Couchman (e), it appeared that the plaintiff had, by a voluntary settlement (made with the object of protecting himself against extravagant habits), assigned property to trustees, upon trust for himself for life, remainder to his wife (if any) for life, remainder to his issue, and in default of issue to his paternal next of kin. Mr. Justice NORTH, while refusing to set aside the settlement, thought that the ultimate limitation was unusual, and that the settlor's attention was not called to it, and that he did not understand the effect of it; and accordingly his lordship ordered the settlement to be rectified so as to give the settlor a power of appointment in default or failure of issue. His lordship, however, was careful to add:
 "The fact that a usual power was omitted here would not weigh with me in the least, if I were satisfied that the omission of such a power had been brought to the attention

2. Where a person, apparently at the point of death, executed a voluntary settlement, of which he recollected nothing, which was never read to him, and in which a power of revocation was purposely omitted by the solicitor on the ground that he knew the variable character of the settlor, and there was also evidence that the settlor thought that he was executing the settlement in place of a will, it was held that the settlement was revocable (f).

3. Even where there is valuable consideration given, but the settlor is infirm and ignorant, and there is reason to suppose that he did not fully understand the transaction, it will be set aside, unless it be proved that full value was given (g).

Fraud.

1. Where a settlor has been induced by fraud to make a settlement (whether voluntary or based upon value), it will not be enforced; as, for instance, where a wife induces her husband to execute a deed of separation, in contemplation of a renewal of illicit intercourse (h). Where, however, it is not in her contemplation at the time, but she does in fact subsequently commit adultery, then as there was no original fraud, the subsequent adultery will not avoid the settlement (i).

Undue religious influence.

2. On the other hand, where a confidential relationship exists between the settlor and the beneficiary at the date of the settlement, the onus is decidedly thrown on the beneficiary of proving affirmatively, not only that there was no undue influence exerted, but that the settlor had independent advice, and that the settlement contains all usual and proper powers and provisions, and if there are any unusual provisions, that they were brought to the notice of and understood by the settlor. Thus, in the leading case of Huguenin v. Baseley (k), where a widow lady, very much under the influence of a clergyman, made a voluntary settlement in his favour, it was held to be invalid. As BOWEN, L.J., said in a recent and most important leading case (l), "It is plain that equity will not allow a person who exercises or enjoys a dominant religious influence over another, to benefit directly or indirectly by the gifts which the donor makes under or in consequence of such influence, unless it is shown that the donor, at the time of making the gift, was allowed full and free opportunity for counsel and advice outside—the means of considering his or her worldly position, and exercising an independent will about it. This is not a limitation placed on the action of the donor; it is a fetter placed on the conscience of the recipient of the gift, and one which arises out of public policy and fair play."

3. On similar grounds, a gift made by a client to a solicitor, while the relation of solicitor and client exists, is voidable. And although such gift may be ratified after the relation has ceased to exist, yet, in order to establish ratification, it must be proved to the satisfaction of the court that the donor, at the time when he was a free agent, and knew of his right to recall the gift, intentionally determined to forego that right. In the absence of such evidence, the gift may be avoided, not only by the donor, but by his personal representatives (m). As COTTON, L.J., said (n): "We must find something equivalent to a present gift when the influence arising from the existence of the relationship had ceased to exist: in the words of TURNER, L.J., in Wright v. Vanderplank (o), there must be 'a fixed, deliberate,

In the case of a gift to a solicitor, the court looks most carefully to see if there has been a fixed, deliberate, and unbiassed determination on the part of the donor that the transaction should not be impeached." Indeed, the Court of Appeal has laid it down that in the absence of independent advice, the presumption that the settlor was unduly influenced is absolute and irrebuttable; and has also extended the doctrine not only to gifts to the solicitor himself, but also to his wife (p), or his son (q).

influence.

4. So, where a deed conferring a benefit on the settlor's father is executed by a child who is not yet emancipated from his father's control, if the deed is subsequently impeached by the child, the onus is on the father to show that the child had independent advice, and acted on that advice (r), and that he executed the deed with full knowledge of its contents, and with the full intention of giving the father the benefit conferred by it (s). However, where such a deed is substantially a resettlement of family estates (as distinguished from a mere voluntary trust in favour of a parent), it is not essential that the child should have independent advice; and the court will not inquire whether the influence of the father was exerted with more or less force (t). No doubt, where the father obtains a benefit under such a deed, the jealousy of the court is aroused; yet, if, on the whole facts, the benefit is not an unfair one, the court will not set it aside (u). These remarks, however, do not extend to the case where a father obtains a benefit under his daughter's marriage settlement. In such cases, the daughter ought to have independent advice (u). In a recent case (r), FARWELL, J., laid it down broadly, that where a young person is minded to make a voluntary settlement in favour of a parent, it is not enough that he should have independent advice, unless he acts on that advice; it is the duty of a solicitor independently advising an intending settlor, to protect him against himself, and not merely against the personal influence of the donee in the particular transaction; and if his advice is not accepted he should decline to act further. The learned judge also considered that in every voluntary settlement of this kind, a power of revocation should be inserted.

1. Where a father induced a young son, who was still under his roof, and subject to his influence, to make a settlement in favour of his step-brothers and sisters, it was held, that if the son had applied promptly, the court would have set it aside. But as he had remained quiescent for some years, and had made no objection to the course which he had been persuaded to follow, he was not entitled to relief. For by so doing, he had in his maturer years practically adopted and confirmed that which he had done in his early youth (x). Nor will the court interfere where the settlor subsequently acts under the deed, or does something which shows that he recognises its validity; unless, indeed, he was ignorant of the effect of the settlement at the date of such recognition (y). Acquiescence.

2. So where a lady entered a religious sisterhood, and, under circumstances which amounted to undue influence, made a voluntary settlement in favour of the sisterhood, but omitted, for more than six years after severing her connection with it, to seek to have the settlement set aside, it was held that her acquiescence barred her claim for relief. As LINDLEY, L.J., said: "In this particular case, the plaintiff considered, when she left the sisterhood, what course she should take; and she determined to do nothing, but to leave matters as they were. She insisted on having back her will, but she never asked for her money until the end of five years or so after she had left the sisterhood. Change of status.

3. An instance of the effect of change of status in preventing the settlor from procuring the cancellation of a settlement, even where its execution was induced by most serious misrepresentations, is afforded by the case of Johnston v. Johnston (a). There the settlor had married a lady who represented to him that she had divorced her first husband for adultery and cruelty; whereas, in point of fact, she herself had been divorced for adultery at his suit. The settlor, on discovering this, commenced an action to have the settlement set aside. PEARSON, J., dismissed it as being frivolous and vexatious; and the Court of Appeal confirmed his decision, on the ground that the plaintiff could not set aside the settlement and yet keep the only consideration which was given for it; one essential condition of cancellation being (as FRY, L.J., observed) restitutio in integrum, which was there impossible.

ART. 15.—When void as against Settlor's Creditors under 13 Eliz. c. 5 (b).

(b) In this article I have attempted to digest the effect of the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, passed "for the avoiding of feigned, covinous, and fraudulent feoffments, etc., contrived of malice, fraud, covin, collusion, or guile, to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors or others," by which it was enacted, that "all and every feoffment, gift, grant, alienation, bargain, and conveyance of lands, tenements, hereditaments, goods, chattels, or any of them, by writing or otherwise, and all and every bond, suit, judgment, and execution to and for any intent or purpose before declared and expressed, shall be deemed and taken only as cution (d), is (independently of the bankruptcy law) void as against existing and future creditors of the settlor if it be executed with intent to defeat or delay their claims (e).

Art. 15.

(2) Provided, nevertheless, that settlements otherwise void under this article, are valid in favour of persons (whether original beneficiaries or their assigns) who, bonâ fide and without notice of the intended fraud, have acquired their beneficial interests by giving, or being privy to, valuable consideration (f).

Considerable conflict of judicial opinion has arisen over this statute, viz., whether an intent to defeat or delay creditors must be inferred as a matter of law where the reasonable and probable result of the settlement was to defeat or delay, although the tribunal might be convinced that, as a matter of fact, the settlor never had any such intention. In Freeman v. Pope (g) the late Lord HATHERLEY against that person or persons, his or their heirs, successors, executors, administrators and assigns whose action, suits, debts, accounts, damages, penalties, forfeitures, heriots, mortuaries and reliefs by such guileful, covinous or fraudulent devices and practices as is aforesaid are, shall, or might be in any ways disturbed, delayed or defrauded, to be clearly and utterly void, frustrate and of none effect; any pretence, colour, feigned consideration, or any other matter or thing to the contrary notwithstanding." By the fifth section it was provided that the Act should "not extend to any estate or interest in lands, etc., or goods, etc. assured upon good consideration and bonâ fide to any person not having at the time of such assurance any notice or knowledge of such covin, fraud or collusion."

(c) Copyholds formerly not included (Matthews v. Feaver, 1 Cox 272), but now included by effect of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 11.

(e) No delay short of the statutory period of limitation will bar an action to set aside such a settlement, the right being legal and not equitable (Re Maddever, 27 Ch. D. 523).

(f) George v. Milbanke, 9 Ves. 189; Darbeny v. Cockburn, 1 Mer. 638; and Halifax Joint Stock Bank v. Gledhill, [1891] 1 Ch. 31. And where the consideration for a settlement is marriage, and the intended wife knows nothing of the fraudulent intention, the settlement is good qua her and her children (Kevan v. Crawford, 6 Ch. D. 29).

(g) 5 Ch. App. 540.

Art. 15. distinctly affirmed that such an intent must be inferred, saying: "It is established by the authorities, that, in the absence of any direct proof of intention [to defraud], if a person owing debts makes a settlement which subtracts from the property which is the proper fund for the payment of those debts, an amount without which the debts cannot be paid, then, since it is the necessary consequence of the settlement (supposing it effectual) that some creditors must remain unpaid, it would be the duty of the judge to direct the jury that they must infer the intent of the settlor to have been to defeat or delay his creditors, and that the case is within the statute." And Lord Justice GIFFARD said: "Where the settlement is voluntary, the intent may be inferred in a variety of ways. For instance, if, after deducting the property which is the subject of the voluntary settlement, sufficient available assets are not left for the payment of the settlor's debts, the law infers intent."

These dicta of Lord HATHERLEY and Lord Justice GIFFARD that "if the necessary effect of the instrument was to defeat, hinder, or delay creditors, the judge or jury must as a matter of law infer fraudulent intent," can, however, no longer be accepted as correct, the Court of Appeal, in Ex parte Mercer (h), and the Privy Council in Godfrey v. Poole (i), having decided that the proper principle is that, "the language of the Act being, that any conveyance of property is void against creditors if it is made with intent to defeat, hinder, or delay creditors, the court is to decide in each particular case whether, on all the circumstances, it can come to the conclusion that the intention of the settlor, in making the settlement, was to defeat, hinder, or delay his creditors" (k).

The confusion which has arisen has doubtless been caused (as was pointed out by Lord Justice BOWEN in a case not arising under this statute (l)) by the fact that equity judges have always had to decide questions of law and fact together. "An equity judge, when he had to deal with a question of fraud, discussed his reasons for coming to the conclusion that there had been fraud; and it very often happened, that an equity judge decided that there was fraud in a case in which gross negligence had been proved. If the case had been tried with a jury, the judge would have pointed out to them that gross negligence might amount to evidence of fraud, if it were so gross as to be incompatible with the idea of honesty; but even gross negligence, in the absence of dishonesty, did not of itself amount to fraud. Cases of gross negligence in which the Chancery judges decided that there had been fraud, were piled up one upon another, until at last a notion came to be entertained that it was sufficient to prove gross negligence in order to establish fraud. That is not so. In all these cases fraud and dishonesty were the proper ratio decidendi, and gross negligence was only one of the elements which the judge had to consider in making up his mind whether the defendant's conduct had been dishonest."

The same view had been previously expressed by Lord ESHER, M.R., in Ex parte Mercer, Re Wise (m), where his lordship said: "No doubt, in coming to a particular conclusion as to the intention in a man's mind, you should take into account the necessary result of the acts which he has done. I do not use the words 'necessary result' metaphorically, but in their ordinary business sense; and, of course, if there was nothing to the contrary, you would come to the conclusion that the man did intend the necessary result of his acts. But if other circumstances make you believe that the man did not intend to do that which you are asked to find that he did intend—to say that because that was the necessary result of what he did, you must find, contrary to the other evidence, that he did actually intend to do it, is to ask one to find that to be a fact which one really believes to be untrue in fact." Lord Justice LINDLEY in the same case added: "The language which has been used in a great many cases, that a man must in point of law be held to have intended the necessary

Art. 15. — consequences of his own acts, is apt to mislead, by confusing the boundary between law and fact—between consequences which can be foreseen with those which cannot.” The rule, therefore, according to the more recent decisions, is that of common sense, viz., that the court has to decide as a fact in each case, what, on the whole evidence, was the intention of the settlor in making the settlement, and is not obliged to infer fraudulent intent where it did not in fact exist.

Direct fraud. 1. In Twynne's Case (n) Pierce was indebted to Twynne in £400 and to C. in £200. C. brought an action for his debt, and, pending the result, Pierce conveyed all his goods to the value of £300, to Twynne in satisfaction of his debt; but Pierce continued in possession of them. Here the court held that there was direct evidence of an intention on the part of Pierce to hinder and delay C.; and that although Twynne had given valuable consideration for the goods, yet he was privy to the fraud, and consequently could not avail himself of the proviso. Stress was laid upon the fact that Pierce was allowed to remain in possession of the goods, although the conveyance purported to be not a mere mortgage, but an absolute alienation. Had it been a mortgage, of course the mere fact of the mortgagor retaining possession would have been no badge of fraud, as it is one of the usual incidents of a mortgage (o). The main and substantial point, however, which the court decided was, that it was obvious, for divers reasons, that the conveyance was a mere fraudulent arrangement between Twynne and Pierce to shelter the latter from the just demands of his creditors, and was therefore void under the statute.

Direct intent to avoid anticipated judgment. 2. So, again, where a director of a company was sued by the company, and fearing that a judgment would be given against him, made a voluntary assignment to his daughter of all his property, it was held that the fraudulent intention was manifest, and that the settlement was void as against the company, although they were not creditors at the time, and it did not appear that there were any creditors at the time (p). Even though the daughter was no party to the fraud, yet she was not protected, because she had not given valuable consideration. Art. 15.

3. And so, again, in Spirrett v. Willows (q), the settlor being solvent at the time, but having contracted a considerable debt which would fall due in the course of a few weeks, made a voluntary settlement by which he withdrew a large portion of his property from the payment of debts, after which he collected the rest of his assets and spent them in the most reckless way, thus depriving the expectant creditor of the means of being paid. In that case there was clear and plain evidence of an actual intention to defeat creditors, and accordingly the settlement was set aside (r). Direct intent
creditors.

4. Again, a trader, who had for many years carried on the business of a baker and had saved money, being about to purchase a grocery business which he intended to carry on in addition to the other, made a voluntary settlement of the bulk of his property for the benefit of his wife and children. He afterwards bought the grocery business and carried it on for about six months, but lost money by it. He then sold it for as much money as he had given for it, and afterwards carried on the baker's business alone until, about three years after the execution of the settlement, he filed a liquidation petition, his liabilities largely exceeding his assets. The debts which he owed at the date of the settlement had been all paid. On these facts, it was held that (independently of the question whether he was solvent at the date of the settlement) the settlement was void as against his creditors, on the ground that it was evidently executed with the view of putting the settlor's property out of their reach, in case he should fail in the speculation on which he was about to enter in carrying on a new business of which he knew nothing (s).

5. And so generally "a man is not entitled to go into a hazardous business, and immediately before doing so, to settle all his property voluntarily; the object being, 'If I succeed in business, I make a fortune for myself. If I fail, I leave my creditors unpaid. They will bear the loss.' That is the very thing which the Statute of Elizabeth was meant to prevent" (t).

Fraudulent

6. However, the above illustrations must be read with this proviso, that even where the circumstances, if unexplained, would give rise to the inference of intention to defraud, yet, if the defendant's evidence is sufficient to convince the court that he had, in fact, no such intention, the settlement will not be disturbed. In short, the reader is emphatically warned that none of the reported cases of implied fraudulent intent can be now relied upon as authorities, the question of intent being no longer regarded as a question of law, but as purely one of fact in each case.

7. This was very well exemplified in Ex parte Mercer, Re Wise (u). The facts of that case were as follows: A master mariner was married at Hong-Kong on May 31st, 1881. In the following August an action for breach of promise of marriage was commenced against him, and the writ served upon him at Hong-Kong on October the 8th. By the same mail he heard that a legacy of £500 had become payable to him. On October 17th he executed a post-nuptial settlement of the £500 in favour of his wife and issue, being then indebted to no one. In July, 1882, judgment in the breach of promise action went against him for £500; and in November, 1884, he was adjudicated bankrupt. It was thereupon attempted to set aside the post-nuptial settlement under Lord HATHERLEY's dictum in Freeman v. Pope. The bankrupt, however, swore that when he made the settlement he was in no way influenced by the action having been commenced against him, which he thought would come to nothing. On this state of facts the Divisional Court and the Court of Appeal declined to set aside the settlement, on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant a judge or jury in finding that the settlement was intended to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors. GRANTHAM, J., said: "When learned judges have said that if the necessary result of a settlement is to hinder creditors, it must be taken to have been executed with that intent, this observation must be taken as applied to the character of the particular case in which it was made. In all the cases which have been referred to, the settlor had considerable debts or liabilities, and in none of them was there the same reason for making the settlement which existed in the present case, viz., the wish to settle on the wife of the settlor, property to which he had become unexpectedly entitled after his marriage; and it cannot be said that, with the exception of the writ having been served upon him, there was any such inducement for him to make the settlement as there was in all the other cases which have been cited" (x).

8. Most of the above examples have been cases of voluntary settlements; but where there is an express intention to defeat creditors, and all parties to the consideration are parties to that intention, the fact that it was a settlement based on value will not render it valid against the settlor's creditors. Thus, where one, by marriage settlement, settles his own property on himself until bankruptcy, and then over, it has been said that it is so clearly intended to defraud creditors that the wife must be assumed to have been party to that intention, and the trust over on bankruptcy will therefore, as against the general body of his creditors, be void (y). The whole settlement will of course not be void, but only the gift over on bankruptcy (z). Moreover, the principle only applies to property of the husband, and not to property of the wife or of a third party (z). Speaking broadly, a marriage settlement can only be upset against the wife where she has been a party to the fraud (a).

Distinction between gifts over on bankruptcy and gifts over on alienation or execution.

9. These cases, as to the invalidity of trusts to take effect after the settlor's bankruptcy, must be carefully distinguished from that of Re Detmold, Detmold v. Detmold (b). There the settlor, on his marriage, settled property on himself until bankruptcy, or until he should "assign, charge, or incur the income, or should do or suffer something whereby the same or part thereof would, through his act or default, or by operation of law, become vested in or payable to some other person," in which event the income was to become payable to the wife. A single creditor of the husband obtained judgment against him, and a receiver of the settled income was appointed by way of equitable execution. The settlor afterwards became bankrupt. It was, however, held, by NORTH, J., that although, if the husband had first become bankrupt, the trust over in favour of the wife would have been invalid against the general body of creditors under the cases above cited, yet it was valid as against a particular judgment creditor, and that having once taken effect, the subsequent bankruptcy of the settlor could not divest the estate, which had vested in the wife. The learned judge distinguished the case from those above cited, on the ground that a gift over on alienation by a settlor is valid, and that the effect of the receivership order was involuntary alienation, taking place before the commencement of the bankruptcy. The distinction, however, is very fine, and it is, with unfeigned respect, suggested, that if (as seems clear), a gift over on bankruptcy is void against creditors, because it evidences an intention to defeat or delay them, so by parity of reasoning, a gift over on the settlor charging his interest (i.e., to secure a debt), or suffering something (i.e., an execution), whereby the same would, by operation of law, become payable to another, equally evidences a dishonest intent to escape from his just liabilities. Moreover, surely the gift over on bankruptcy of itself proved an intent to defeat or delay creditors, and, the intent being proved, the statute avoids the settlement, not only as against the general body of creditors, but as against judgment creditors. Of course, if the wife had been a bond fide purchaser for value without notice, no question could have arisen; but under Higginbottom v. Holme (c), and that class of cases, the very form of the settlement was sufficient to fix her with notice of its character. Art. 15.

(a) Purnell v. Steadman, 1 C. & E. 153.

10. Where a person married his mistress, and with the intention of defeating his creditors, and with her knowledge of that intention, settled all or a considerable part of his property upon her, the marriage consideration did not render the settlement valid as against the settlor's creditors; for such a marriage was a mere cloak for the fraud, and the wife was particeps criminis (d). Fraudulent marriage settlement where wife privy to fraud.

ILLUSTRATION OF PARAGRAPH (2).

1. But, on the other hand, where a trust based on value would, as between the settlor and his creditors, be clearly void, yet it will be supported as between the creditors and persons parties to the consideration, where such parties are not privy to the settlor's fraudulent intentions. Thus, in Kevan v. Crawford (e), the facts were, that C. (who carried on the business of a flax spinner at S. Mills, in partnership with R.) by a settlement made in contemplation of his marriage, after reciting that he was indebted to his intended wife in a sum of £20,000, covenanted to pay that sum to the trustees, upon trust that as soon as he should become owner in fee simple of S. Mills (which he had agreed to purchase) they should advance the £20,000 to him on mortgage of those mills. It was further declared that the trustees should stand possessed of the £20,000 when so invested, upon trust to pay the income to the intended wife for life for her separate use, with remainder to the husband during his life or until he should become bankrupt, with remainder to the children of the marriage. The recital that C. was indebted to the intended wife in £20,000, was quite Fraudulent settlement upheld in favour of bond fide parties to valuable consideration.

Art. 15. false, and C. was at the time of the marriage in insolvent circumstances; but the intended wife had no knowledge of his insolvent circumstances, and understood nothing about the recitals in the deed. The settlor subsequently purchased the S. Mills estate, and mortgaged it to the trustees for securing the £20,000, but no money actually passed. The settlor afterwards became bankrupt, and the creditors claimed that the settlement was void as against them. It was, however, held that, notwithstanding the falsity of the recitals, the settlement and the mortgage deed consequent thereon were valid so far as concerned the interests of the wife and children; for the former was no party to the settlor's fraud, and gave valuable consideration (viz., marriage) for the settlement, and the latter were parties privy to that consideration.

2. Where a trust, based on value, is sought to be invalidated as against a party privy to the consideration, or where a voluntary trust is sought to be invalidated as against a purchaser for value from a cestui que trust, it must be conclusively shown that such party was privy and party to the fraudulent intent. For, although he may have known that the effect of the assignment would be to hinder or defeat the assignor's creditors, or expectant creditors, yet if the transaction was a bonâ fide purchase, and not a mere collusive arrangement between the parties with the intention of causing such hindrance or delay, it will be upheld (f). It should also be observed, that the protection afforded to bonâ fide purchasers for value from a beneficiary under a fraudulent deed, is not confined to purchasers of legal estates or interests, but extends to purchasers of mere equitable interests (g).

1. Clause 2 of the above article only applies to specific or ear-marked property; and, therefore, where a person by his marriage settlement covenants that he will pay a sum of money to the trustees, such a covenant is perfectly valid. The intention of the Act is to prevent settlements of property expected to accrue at a future time, in which the settlor has at the date of the settlement no present interest. As MELLISH, L.J., put it in Ex parte Bishop, Re Tonnies (x): "The object of the legislature was to provide that specific money or property which, but for the section, would have gone to the trustees [of the settlement] exclusively, should be divided among the creditors [of the settlor]. A covenant to settle such money or property would, in equity, have bound it when it came into actual possession, and the intention was, that if the covenantor had no interest at the Covenants to settle future-acquired property are destroyed by bankruptcy, but not covenants to settle a sum of money.

Art. 16. time, it should go to the creditors, and not to the trustees, of the settlement. If this had been a covenant that in case any property was left to the covenantor by his father or any other person, he would settle it, and the covenantor had no interest in it at the time, the covenant would be void against the trustee in bankruptcy. The word 'money' refers to something of the same nature as 'property,' namely, something specific, and does not apply to that which is a mere debt due from the settlor." Whether, in such cases, property coming to the settlor after his discharge, would remain bound by the covenant is not free from doubt. The section in question only avoids them as against the trustee in bankruptcy, who would, of course, have no claim to property which only vested in the bankrupt after his discharge. It would seem, however, that the bankruptcy would, ipso facto, cancel all the debtor's contracts, including such an one as this (y). It must also be pointed out that documents which purport to assign after-acquired property, are in reality only contracts to do so when the property comes into existence; for "A man cannot in equity, any more than at law, assign what has no existence" (z).

Settlement of property acquired through wife not destroyed by bankruptcy.

1. A wife who was married in 1883, and was then possessed of separate property, allowed that property after the marriage to pass into her husband's hands, but not as a gift nor as a loan for the purposes of his trade. The husband having applied part of this money to his own use, settled the residue of it, together with other property of his own, upon trusts under which he took a life interest, with a proviso for the cesser thereof in the event of his bankruptcy. The wife had no notice of any fraudulent intention on his part. In an action by the husband's trustee in bankruptcy to set aside the settlement it was held that it was not voluntary, and was qua the wife not executed in bad faith, and that to the extent of the wife's property received by the husband, the proviso for cesser of his life interest was good, and that s. 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), did not apply (a). Art. 16.

ART. 17.—When void as against subsequent Purchasers from Settlor.

(1) A settlement of lands is void, as against subsequent bond fide purchasers for value from the settlor, if made with intent to defeat such purchasers (b); or if it is revocable (c).

(2) Provided always, that this article in nowise prejudicially affects bond fide purchasers for value (d), whether beneficiaries under a trust based on value but fraudulent in inception, or assigns of voluntary beneficiaries (e).

The law on this subject, the foundation of which is the statute 27 Eliz. c. 4, has to a large extent been revolutionised by the Voluntary Conveyances Act, 1893 (f). Although the Statute of Elizabeth does not in any way speak of voluntary conveyances, it was for nearly 300 years held, in a long line of decisions, that every voluntary conveyance or settlement was impliedly fraudulent within that statute as against subsequent purchasers, even although no actual intention to defraud existed at the date of the settlement impeached (g). This was purely judge-made law, and

Art. 17. rested on the theory that, by selling the property afterwards for valuable consideration, the settlor so entirely repudiated the former voluntary settlement, and showed his intention to sell, as to raise against him and the beneficiaries a conclusive presumption that such intention existed when he made the voluntary settlement, and consequently that the latter was made with intent to defeat the subsequent purchaser (h). This principle appears to be somewhat far-fetched, and of late years was frequently alluded to with disapprobation by learned judges, who nevertheless intimated that nothing less than legislative interference could alter a rule which had been uniformly acted on for so long a period. At length Parliament intervened, and by the above-mentioned Act of 1893, it is enacted that—

“No voluntary conveyance of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, whether made before or after the passing of this Act, if in fact made bonâ fide and without any fraudulent intent, shall hereafter be deemed fraudulent or covinous within the meaning of the Act twenty-seven Elizabeth, chapter four, by reason of any subsequent purchase for value, or be defeated under any of the provisions of the said Act by a conveyance made upon any such purchase, any rule of law notwithstanding.”

The Act does not extend to cases where the subsequent purchase has been made before June 29th, 1893; and, as many titles depend upon the validity of such subsequent purchases made before that date, it seems necessary to give some examples of the old law. It is also necessary to remind the reader that although, by reason of this statute, voluntary conveyances will no longer be ipso facto void as against subsequent purchasers for value, yet, under the general doctrines of equity, a voluntary conveyance may be postponed to a subsequent purchaser for value without notice if the latter should get a conveyance of the legal estate, or if the beneficiaries under the voluntary settlement have been guilty of negligence, and the settlement did not vest the legal estate in a trustee for them (i).

Art. 17.

1. Instances of settlements framed with the express intention of defrauding subsequent purchasers are rare; but if A. and B. were to conspire together, that A. should sell his lands to B., and that A. should retain the title deeds in order to enable him to sell the land over again to C., the conveyance to B. would be void under the statute as against C. Express intent to defraud.

2. So again, where there was, under a marriage settlement, a power reserved to the settlor to grant a long lease with or without rent, it was held that that was practically a power of revocation pro tanto, and that a subsequent mortgagee of the settlor was entitled to the property for the period during which a lease could have been granted (k). Power of revocation.

3. An excellent example of the old law is afforded by the case of Trowell v. Shenton (l). There a voluntary settlement of houses was made, and some few years afterwards the settlor agreed to sell three of the houses to a purchaser. In an action by the purchaser for specific performance of this agreement, it was held that the settlement was void as against him. It must, however, be pointed out that, as the invalidity of voluntary deeds as against subsequent purchasers depended entirely on an original intention presumed from the fact of the settlor's subsequent attempt to sell, the doctrine only applied when the settlor himself subsequently sold, and not where the subsequent vendor was his heir, or a second voluntary grantee of the settlor (m). Examples of the law prior to June, 1893.

4. However, even under the old law a very small consideration would suffice to remove a bond fide settlement from the category of voluntary settlements for the purposes of the Act of Elizabeth; far less than will suffice to support a settlement made by an insolvent as against his creditors (n). Small consideration was sufficient to save the settlement.

Art. 17. Thus it was held, in Price v. Jenkins (o), that a settlement of leaseholds to which liability to pay rent and perform covenants was attached, was, from the very nature of the property, based on value; for the beneficiaries thereby took upon themselves the primary discharge of those liabilities. This decision has no application, however, where leaseholds are settled by way of sub-demise, as no onus is thereby imposed on the trustees (p).

Mutual promises good consideration.

5. Similarly, where there were mutual promises, each was considered to be a valuable consideration for the other. Thus it was settled, that if husband and wife, each of them having interests, no matter how much, or of what degree or what quality, came to an agreement which was afterwards embodied in a settlement, that was a bargain between husband and wife, which was not a transaction without valuable consideration (q). But where property was devised to the wife for her separate use, the husband had no estate or interest in it; and, consequently, if it were settled by the husband and wife, such a settlement was not considered to be based on value, inasmuch as the husband had no rights to modify (r). And the same principle would of course apply to property belonging to a married woman under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75).

Under old law notice of the settlement by subsequent purchaser was immaterial.

6. Under the old law it was repeatedly held (although modern judges expressed strong disapproval of it), that knowledge of the existence of a voluntary settlement by a subsequent purchaser did not deprive him of the statutory priority (s). However, the voluntary settlement was not cancelled unless the subsequent sale was a real bonâ fide alienation. Thus, where the consideration for the subsequent purchase was grossly inadequate, the sale might be impeached by the voluntary beneficiaries, on the ground that it was on the face of it a collusive arrangement between the settlor and the so-called purchaser for the purpose of relieving the former from the settlement (t). Art. 17.

7. The settlement was, however, void only so far as was necessary to give effect to the subsequent transaction. For instance, in the case of property settled by a voluntary settlement, and subsequently mortgaged, the beneficiaries under the voluntary trust were entitled, subject to the mortgage; and if unsettled estates were included in the mortgage, the beneficiaries were entitled to throw the mortgage on to the unsettled estates, if they were sufficient to answer it (u). CHAPTER IV.

THE CONSTRUCTION OF DECLARED TRUSTS.

ART. 18.—*Executed Trusts construed Strictly,

(1) An executed trust is one in which the limitations of the estate of the trustee and the beneficiaries are perfected and declared by the settlor (a). In the construction of executed trusts, technical terms are construed in their legal and technical sense (b).

(2) An executory trust is either—

- (a) an agreement or covenant for the subsequent execution of a trust instrument; or
- (b) a direction or declaration (usually in a will) giving instructions or short heads from which the trustee is subsequently to model a formal trust instrument (c).

In the construction of executory trusts, the court is not confined to the language used by the settlor. And where that language is improper or informal (d), or would create an illegal trust (e), or would otherwise defeat the settlor's intentions (as gathered from the motives which led to the settlement, and from its general object and purpose, or from other instruments to which it refers, or from any circumstances which may have influenced the settlor's mind (f)), the court will not direct an executed settlement according to the strict meaning of the words used, but will order it to be made in a proper and legal manner so as best may answer the intent of the parties (g).

Art. 18.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

1. A father conveys freeholds to trustees upon certain trusts in favour of his daughters, and also covenants to surrender copyholds to the same trustees, to be held by them on similar trusts. Here the trust of the freeholds is an executed trust; for the estates of the trustee and of the beneficiaries are perfect, and require nothing more to be done. The trust of the copyholds, on the other hand, is an executory trust; for something remains to be done in order to perfect the settlement, viz., that the property should be legally vested in the trustees.

executed and executory
trusts.

2. So, where a testator by will gives property to trustees, in trust to cause it to be settled on his daughter in strict settlement, that is an executory trust; and so are agreements for settlements, such as marriage articles.

3. If an estate is vested in trustees and their heirs, in trust for A. for life without impeachment of waste, with

Art. 18. remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder in trust for the heirs of A.'s body, the trust being an executed trust, A. (according to the rule in Shelley's Case, which is a rule of law and not merely of interpretation) will be held to take an estate tail (h). Of course, where the doctrine could not apply in law (owing to the life estate being equitable and the remainder legal, or vice versa), the rule will not apply in equity (i); nor where the word "heir" is used in the sense of persona designata (k); as, for example, where the ultimate limitation is "to the person who may then be the heir of A."

4. On the other hand, in the leading case of Lord Glenorchy v. Bosville (l), the settlor devised real estate to trustees upon trust, upon the happening of the marriage of his grand-daughter, to convey the estate to the use of her for life, with remainder to the use of her husband for life, with remainder to the issue of her body, with remainders over. It was held, that though the grand-daughter would have taken an estate tail had it been an executed trust, yet as the trust was executory, and as the testator's intention was to provide for the children of the marriage, that intention would be best carried out by a conveyance to the grand-daughter for life, with remainder to her husband for life, with remainder to her first and other sons in tail, with remainder to her daughters.

5. And so in marriage articles, a covenant to settle estates to the use of the husband for life, with remainder to the wife for life, with remainder to their heirs male and the heirs of such heirs male, is always construed to mean that the settlement shall be so drawn as to give life estates only to the husband and wife successively (m); for it is not to be presumed that the parties meant to put it in the power of the husband to defeat the very object of the settlement, which is to make a provision for the issue of the marriage (n). Art. 18.

6. But where the articles show that the parties understood the distinction (as, for instance, where part of the property is limited in strict settlement, and part not), the trust will be construed strictly (o).

7. It would seem that, under a direction to settle on a woman and her children, the usual powers of maintenance and advancement ought to be inserted (p), and also powers of sale and exchange (q). So where marriage articles provide for "powers usually contained in settlements of a like nature," powers of sale, exchange, and reinvestment are authorised (r). Again, where a settlement of personalty contains a power to vary investments, and a covenant to settle after-acquired property on similar trusts, a settlement of after-acquired real estate should contain a power of sale, as that is analogous to a power of varying investments of personalty (s). On the other hand, a reference to certain powers will, it would seem, prima facie negative any others (t). A direction, in marriage articles, that upon the lady having issue, a certain estate should be strictly settled, was held not to authorise a power to provide portions for younger children (u). Powers implied in executory trusts.

8. In a will it is obvious that the same presumption will not arise as in the case of marriage articles. Therefore, Construction of executory trusts in wills.

Art. 18. — where a testator gave £300 to trustees, upon trust to lay it out in the purchase of lands, and to settle such lands to the only use of M. and her children, and if M. died without issue, "the land to be divided between her brothers and sisters then living," it was held that this gave M. an estate tail (x).

9. There is, however, no difference between the construction to be put on an executory trust created by marriage articles, and on an executory trust created by will, except so far as the former (by its very nature) furnishes more emphatically the means of ascertaining the intention of those who created the trust (y). In Sackville West v. Holmesdale, Lord CHELMSFORD said: "The best illustration of the object and purpose of an instrument furnishing an intention in the case of executory trusts, is to be found in the instance of marriage articles, where, the object of the settlement being to make a provision for the issue of the marriage, no words, however strong (which in the case of an executed trust would place the issue in the power of the father), will be allowed to prevail against the implied intention. So, as Sir W. GRANT said, in Blackburn v. Stables (z), 'in the case of a will, if it can be clearly ascertained from anything in the will that the testator did not mean to use the expressions which he has employed in their strict technical sense, the court, in decreeing such settlement as he has directed, will depart from his words to execute his intention.' . . . There are cases of executory trusts in wills, where the words 'heirs of the body' have been made to bend to indications of intention that the estate should be strictly settled; and a direction in a will, that a settlement 'shall be made as counsel shall advise,' has been held sufficient to show that the words were not intended to have their strict legal effect'" (a).

life without impeachment of waste, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to the heirs of A.'s body, and with a power to jointure. He also devised land to A. upon exactly similar uses. It was held, that the testator manifested an intention to give A. a life estate only; and that consequently, in the case of the executory trusts, this intention should be carried out; but that in the case of the devise, that being executed, must be construed according to the rule in Shelley's Case (b). In fact, any indication that the first taker is not to take in tail or fee is sufficient; as, for instance, a direction that he is to be unimpeachable for waste, or that he shall not have power to bar the entail, or the like (c).

11. A devise (subject to life interest of testator's widow), upon trust to convey, assign, and assure freehold property "unto and to the use of my son T. F., and the heirs of his body lawfully issuing, but in such manner and form, nevertheless, and subject to such limitations and restrictions, as that if T. F. shall happen to die without leaving lawful issue, then that the property may after his death descend unincumbered unto and belong to my daughter R. F., her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns":—Held, that the devise was an executory trust to be executed by a conveyance to the use of T. F. during his life, with remainder to his first and other sons and daughters as purchasers in tail, with remainder to R. F. in fee (d).

12. A. devised lands to a corporation in trust to convey to A. for life, and afterwards, upon the death of A., to his first son for life, and then to the first son of that first son for life, with remainder (in default of issue male of A.) to B. for life, and to his sons and their sons in like manner. CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCTION.

ART. 19.—Analysis of Constructive Trusts.

(1) Constructive trusts are either resulting trusts (in which the equitable interest springs back or results to a settlor or his representatives), or non-resulting trusts.

(2) Resulting trusts arise in the three following cases, viz. :—

(a) when a legal estate is given to another, but the equitable interest is not, or is only partially disposed of (a).

(b) when the equitable interest is disposed of in a manner which the law will not permit to be carried out (b).

Art. 19.

- (c) when a purchase has been made in the name of some other person than the real purchaser (c), or personal property has been transferred to a stranger in blood without consideration.

(3) Constructive trusts which are not resulting arise :—

- (a) when some person holding a fiduciary position has made a profit out of the trust property (d).
(b) in all other cases where there is no express trust, but the legal and equitable estates in property are nevertheless not co-equal and united in the same individual (e).

ART. 20.—Where Equitable Interest not wholly disposed of.

(1) When it appears to have been the intention of a donor (a) that the donee was not to take beneficially, there will be a resulting trust in favour of the donor or his representatives in the following cases, viz. :—

- (a) if the instrument is either silent as to the way in which the beneficial interest is to be applied; or
- (b) if it directs that it shall be applied for a particular purpose (as distinguished from a mere subjection to such purpose (b)) which turns out to be insufficient to exhaust the property; or
- (c) if an express trust cannot be carried into effect (c).

1. Thus, where real estate was devised to "my trustees," but no trusts were declared in relation to it, it was held that the trustees must hold it in trust for the testator's heir. For by the expression "trustees," unexplained by anything else in the instrument (f), all notion of a beneficial interest being intended in their favour was excluded (g).

2. A testator devised and bequeathed all his estate and effects to A. and B., their heirs, executors, and administrators, upon trust to convert his personal estate, and to stand possessed of the proceeds and of the residue of his estate and effects, upon trusts only applicable to personalty. It was held that the real estate of the testator passed to the trustees by the use of the word "devise" in the gift, and the word "heirs" in the limitation; but that as the trusts were rigidly and exclusively applicable to personal property, and as the trustees had been designated by that name, and so could not take beneficially, there was a resulting trust of the real estate in favour of the settlor's heirs (h).

Art. 20.

1. Where there is a devise to A. upon trust to pay debts, or to answer an annuity, there is a resulting trust of what remains after payment of the debts or satisfaction of the annuity (i). And, on similar principles, where there was a trust for a widower until he should die or marry again, and upon his death the property was to be held in trust for his children (the will not saying what was to be done with it in the event of his second marriage), it was held that upon his marrying again there was a resulting trust of the income in favour of the settlor's next of kin during the residue of the widower's life (k).

Residue after satisfaction of express trust.

2. But where (l) one made his will and thereby gave £5 to his brother (who was also his heir-at-law), and made and constituted his "dearly beloved wife" his "sole heiress and executrix" of all his lands and real and personal estate, to sell and dispose thereof at her pleasure, and to pay his debts and legacies, it was held, that the wife was entitled to the real estate for her own benefit, and that there was no resulting trust to the heir. The ground of this decision was, that the direction that the wife should be sole heiress, did in every respect place her in the stead of the heir-at-law, and not as trustee for him, and that this was "rendered plainer by reason of the language of tenderness and affection which must intend to her something beneficial, and not what would be a trouble only"; in addition to which the heir was not forgotten, but had £5 left him.

No resulting trust where it appears that donee was to take beneficially.

3. So, where debtors assigned their property to trustees in trust to sell, and divide the proceeds amongst their creditors in rateable proportions according to the amounts of their respective debts, it was held by the House of Lords that there was no resulting trust in favour of the debtors, in the event of there being more than sufficient to pay twenty shillings in the pound (m). This decision was, however, founded entirely on the construction of the particular deed, and turned apparently to some extent, upon the fact that all the best precedents contained an express trust (n) of any surplus in favour of the debtors. It must, therefore, not be rashly assumed that the same decision would be arrived at if, on the language of another creditor's deed, it should appear that the object was to pay debts (or a dividend on debts), and not to assign the property for better or for worse by way of accord and satisfaction. It may be observed that where under a similar assignment to that mentioned in the last illustration, there is not enough to pay all the creditors in full, any unclaimed dividends must be applied in augmentation of the dividends of the creditors who do claim (o).

Charge does not imply resulting trust of residue.

4. And so under a devise to A., charged with the payment of debts and legacies (p), or charged with the payment of a contingent legacy (q) which does not take effect, there will be no resulting trust, but the whole property will go to the devisee beneficially, subject only to the charge. And the same result will follow even where property is devised to A. "upon trust" to pay specific legacies, if on the whole will it appears that the testator merely meant to charge the legacies on the property (r).

(m) Smith v. Cooke, [1891] 1 A. C. 297. It is difficult, if not impossible, to reconcile this case with Green v. Wynn, 4 Ch. App. 204, which does not seem to have been quoted to their lordships.

(n) Lord HALSBURY spoke, in his judgment, of it being the "ordinary and familiar method in such cases to express a resulting trust on the face of the instrument." This phrase has given rise to much comment in technical circles, as a resulting trust, in the sense attributed to the term by equity lawyers, only arises in the absence of an express one. It is, however, sufficiently obvious that what his lordship meant was, that if it were intended to have an ultimate trust springing back (i.e., resulting) to the debtor, the familiar mode of doing this was by expressing it on the face of the instrument, and not leaving it to be implied. He was, in fact, using the phrase "resulting trust," not in the narrow technical sense of a constructive resulting trust, but in the wider, original etymological sense, of a trust (whether express or implied), springing back, or resulting, to its creator.

1. Where lands have been conveyed to a trustee but the trusts have not been manifested and proved by a signed writing in accordance with the Statute of Frauds, there will be a resulting trust to the settlor (s). Lands vested in trustee, but no written trust.

2. So, if a declared trust is too uncertain or vague to be executed (t), or fails by lapse (u), or otherwise, or becomes in the event too remote (v), then, as it is expressed on the face of the instrument that the trustee was not intended to take beneficially, there will be a resulting trust. Thus, where a trades union was dissolved, and no provision was made by its rules for the distribution of its surplus assets, it was held that there was a resulting trust in favour of the members in the proportions in which they had contributed to its funds (x). Uncertainty or failure of express trust.

3. So where a settlement is executed in contemplation of a marriage which is subsequently broken off, there is a total failure of the consideration on which the settlement was based, and the property results to the settlor (y). Total failure of consideration for express trust.

2. But where a person purchased sums of stock in the names of herself and the son of her daughter-in-law, verbal evidence was admitted to rebut the presumption of a resulting trust (arising under Article 22, infra), because there was nothing to show on the face of the instrument that the son of the daughter-in-law was merely a trustee. JAMES, L.J., said: "Where the Court of Chancery is asked, on an equitable assumption or presumption, to take away from a man that which, by the common law of the land, he is entitled to, he surely has a right to say 'Listen to my story as to how I came to have it, and judge that story with reference to all the surrounding facts and circumstances'" (a).

3. So evidence is admissible to rebut the legal presumption as to part only—for instance, to prove that the donee was intended to take a life interest, although there is a resulting trust as to the remainder, and vice versa (b).

1. Where a father granted land to his son, in order to give him a colourable qualification to shoot game under the old game laws, and without any intention of conferring any beneficial interest upon him, the court would not enforce any resulting trust in favour of the father. For he and the son were in pari delicto, and there was no detriment to the public in allowing the son to retain the estate (g). Of course, if there had been no illegality (if, for instance, a bare legal estate had been a sufficient qualification), there would have been a resulting trust (h).

In the United States of America this distinction does not prevail. There the question whether the illegal purpose has failed or succeeded is deemed to be immaterial, and the only question considered is whether the trust is executed or executory. In the former case there is no resulting trust; in the latter the expressed trust will not be enforced.

wife's sister (which ceremony was known to both parties to be invalid), executed a settlement by which it was recited that he was desirous of making a provision for the lady, and had transferred certain shares into the names of trustees, upon the trusts thereafter declared, being for the separate and inalienable use of the lady during her life, and after her death as she should by deed or will appoint. They afterwards lived together as man and wife until the widower's death. Some time afterwards, his personal representatives instituted a suit to set aside the settlement, on the ground that it was founded on an immoral consideration. Lord SELBORNE, however, said: "Relief is sought by the representative, not merely of a particeps criminis, but of a voluntary and sole donor, on the naked ground of the illegality of his own intention and purpose, and that, not against a bond or covenant or other obligation resting in fieri, but against a completed transfer of specific chattels, by which the legal estate in those chattels was absolutely vested in trustees for the sole benefit of the defendant. I know of no doctrine of public policy which requires or authorizes a court of equity to give assistance to such a plaintiff under such circumstances. When the immediate and direct effect of an estoppel in equity against relief to a particular plaintiff might be to effectuate an unlawful object, or to defeat a legal prohibition, or to protect a fraud, such an estoppel may well be regarded as against public policy. But the voluntary gift of part of his own property by one particeps criminis to another, is in itself neither fraudulent nor prohibited by law; and the present is not the case of a man repenting of an immoral purpose before it is too late, and seeking to recall, while the object is yet unaccomplished (k), a gift intended as a bribe to iniquity. If public policy is opposed, as it is, to vice and immorality, it is no less true, as was said by Lord TRURO in Benyon v. Nettlefold (l), that the law in sanctioning the defence of particeps criminis does so on the grounds of public policy,—namely, that those who violate the law must not apply to the law for protection." In the more recent case of Phillips v. Probyn (m),

Mr. Justice NORTH distinguished Ayerst v. Jenkins on the ground that in the case before him the settlement was made in consideration of a contemplated illicit so-called marriage with a deceased wife's sister. It is, however, humbly submitted, that the settlement in Ayerst v. Jenkins was also made in contemplation of, and as part of, the arrangements consequent on such a marriage, and that there is really no valid distinction between the two cases. The practitioner must also carefully bear in mind, that where property is transferred to trustees in trust for the settlor until an intended marriage with his deceased wife's sister is solemnized, and then in trust for the lady and issue of the marriage, the trust will be void, inasmuch as such a marriage cannot take place (n), and therefore the condition precedent can never be performed.

1. In Symes v. Hughes (o), the plaintiff, being in pecuniary difficulties, assigned certain leasehold property to a trustee with the view of defeating his creditors. Two and a half years afterwards he was adjudicated bankrupt, but obtained the sanction of his creditors, under s. 110 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, to an arrangement, by which his estate and effects were re-vested in him, he covenanting to prosecute a suit for the recovery of the assigned property, and to pay a composition of two and sixpence in the pound to his creditors, in case his suit should prove successful. Lord ROMILLY, M.R., in delivering judgment, said: "Where the purpose for which the assignment was given is not carried into execution, and nothing is done under it, the mere intention to effect an illegal object when the assignment was executed does not deprive the assignor of his right to recover the property from the assignee who has given no consideration for it."

It subsequently transpired that the plaintiff was not liable to be indicted, and thereupon he filed a bill praying for a re-transfer of his property. It was held, that although there was no express trust, (inasmuch as there was no written proof of it,) yet there was a resulting trust to which the statute did not apply; and as there was no illegality in fact, but only in intention, the court ordered the transfer prayed for (p).

against perpetuities or accumulations.

1. Where a settlor attempts to settle property so as to contravene the policy of the law with regard to perpetuities, such trusts will not only not be carried into effect, but the person nominated to carry them out is held to be a mere trustee for the settlor or his representatives. For the attempt was made either through ignorance or carelessness, or else with a direct intention to contravene the law. In the former case, as there would be no delictum, the usual maxim would not apply. In the latter, equity would not allow the trustee to retain the property and so put it in his power to carry out the illegal intentions of the testator, and to defeat the policy of the law (r). So where the settlor directs accumulations beyond the statutory period, there is a resulting trust between the end of the twenty-one years and the period for which the accumulations were directed (s).

2. And so again, where lands, or the proceeds of land, were devised to charitable uses, or were devised to one who was, under a secret agreement with the testator, pledged to apply them to charitable purposes, then, notwithstanding the improper intentions of the testator, there was a resulting trust. For the result of allowing the gift to stand would probably have been to effect an object prohibited by law (t). But of course this is no longer so since the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 73).

(1) When real or personal property (u) is taken in the names of the purchaser and others generally, or in the names of others without that of the purchaser, or in one name, or in several, and whether jointly or successively, there is a prima facie presumption of a resulting trust in favour of the person who (by parol (x) or other evidence) is proved to have advanced the purchase-money (y) in the character of purchaser (z). In any of these cases a prima facie (but rebuttable (f)) presumption will arise that the purchaser intended the ostensible grantee or grantees to take absolutely.

For the lender did not advance the purchase-money as purchaser (k), but merely as lender.

2. In Standing v. Bowring (l) the facts were as follows: Evidence of intention to benefit.
The plaintiff, a widow, in the year 1880 transferred £6,000 consols into the joint names of herself and her godson, the defendant. This she did with the express intention that the defendant, in the event of his surviving her, should have the consols, but that she herself should retain the dividends during her life. She had been previously warned that her act was irrevocable. In delivering judgment, COTTON, L.J., said: "The rule is well settled that where there is a transfer by a person into his own name jointly with that of a person who is not his child, or his adopted child, then there is prima facie a resulting trust for the transferor. But that is a presumption capable of being rebutted, by showing that, at the time, the transferor intended a benefit to the transferee; and in the present case there is ample evidence that at the time of the transfer, or for some time previously, the plaintiff intended to confer a benefit, by this transfer, on her late husband's godson."

3. In Crabb v. Crabb (m), a father transferred a sum of Advancement of son.
stock from his own name into the joint names of his son and of a broker, and told the latter to carry the dividends to the son's account. The father, by a codicil to his will executed subsequently, bequeathed the stock to another; but it was held that the son took absolutely. The Master of the Rolls said: "If the transfer is not ambiguous, but a clear and unequivocal act, as I must take it on the authorities, for explanation there is no place. The transfer being held an advancement, nothing contained in the codicil, nor any other matter ex post facto, can ever be allowed to alter what has been already done." In short, a resulting trust

4. But a declaration made by the father at or before the date of the purchase is admissible to rebut the presumption, although it might not be good as a declaration of trust, on account of its not being reduced into writing. For, "as the trust would result to the father were it not rebutted by the sonship as a circumstance of evidence, the father may counteract that circumstance by the evidence arising from his parol declaration" (n).

5. Surrounding circumstances may also tend to rebut the presumption. Thus, a father, upon his son's marriage, gave him a considerable advancement, having several younger children who had no provision. He subsequently sold an estate, but £500 only of the purchase-money being paid, he took a security for the residue in the joint names of himself and his said son. He himself, however, received the interest, and a great part of the principal without any opposition from the son, as did his executrix after his death, the son writing receipts for the interest. Under these circumstances it was held that the son took nothing; the Lord Chancellor saying: "Where a father takes an estate in the name of his son, it is to be considered as an advancement; but that is liable to be rebutted by subsequent acts. So if the estate be taken jointly, so that the son may be entitled by survivorship, that is weaker than the former case, and still depends on circumstances. The son knew here that his name was used in the mortgage, and must have known whether it was for his own interest or only as a trustee for the father; and instead of making any claim, his acts are very strong evidence of the latter; nor is there any colour why the father should make him any further advancement when he had so many children unprovided for" (o). The dictum of the learned Chancellor, that the presumption may be rebutted by subsequent acts, cannot be taken to mean subsequent acts of the father, which are only admissible against, and not for, him (p); but must, it is apprehended, refer only to subsequent acts of the son (and only to them when there is nothing to show that the father did actually intend to advance the son (q)); or to subsequent acts of the father so acquiesced in by the son as to raise the presumption that the son always knew that no benefit was intended for him. It is also to be remarked, that the fact of the father having previously made provision for the son, would not of itself have been sufficient to rebut the usual presumption, although taken together with other circumstances, it was a strong link in the chain (r).

6. So the relationship of solicitor and client between the son and the parent has been considered a circumstance that will, of itself, rebut the presumption of advancement (s).

7. Again, a sum of consols was vested in the trustees of a marriage settlement upon the usual trusts. The husband directed the bankers who received the dividends (and paid them to him as tenant for life under a power of attorney from the trustees), to invest an additional sum of £2,000 consols in the names of the same trustees, so that they might receive the dividends as before. This was done, and the husband received the income of the whole during his life. No notice of the new investment was ever given to the trustees. It was held that there was no resulting trust of the £2,000 for the husband, but that it became subject to the trusts of the settlement as an augmentation of the trust fund (t).

8. In Re De Visme (u) it was laid down, that where a married woman had, out of her separate estate, made a purchase in the name of her children, no presumption of advancement arose, inasmuch as a married woman was under no obligation to maintain her children. This case was followed by the late Sir GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in

Art. 22. Bennet v. Bennet (v), where a mother was entitled to property under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, by which married women were made as liable as widows for the maintenance of their children. The late Master of the Rolls, however, gave it as his opinion, that the presumption of intention to advance, depended, not on the liability to maintain, but on the moral obligation on the part of a father to provide a provision or fortune for a child, and that there was no such obligation recognised on the part of a mother. If that be so, the law still remains the same, notwithstanding that the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), renders a wife as liable for the maintenance of her children as a husband is. However, it is conceived that the point is still an open one, as Sir GEORGE JESSEL's judgment is admittedly in direct conflict with that of the late Vice-Chancellor STUART in Sayre v. Hughes (x); where the presumption of intention to benefit was based by the Vice-Chancellor rather on motive than on duty. His lordship said: "Maternal affection as a motive of bounty is perhaps the strongest of all, although the duty is not so strong as in the case of a father, inasmuch as it is the duty of a father to advance his child. That, however, is a moral obligation, and not a legal one." On the whole, it is with much diffidence conceived that if the authorities should hereafter come under review, the views of the late Vice-Chancellor STUART would be found to have as much to be said in their favour as those of the late Master of the Rolls. Neither judge bases the presumption on legal obligation. Both admit that the presumption is founded on a moral presumption of intention. But if so, surely there is as much moral presumption of an intention by a mother to benefit her offspring, as there is in the case of a father; and if neither law nor equity imposes any obligation on a father to advance his child, it is difficult to see on what principle an equity judge should invent an imperfect obligation of this kind as a foundation for a presumption of intention to benefit, while at the same time rejecting a similar moral obligation on the part of a wealthy mother. In reason and in custom, there is assuredly as much obligation on the part of a mother who has the command of money, to benefit her children with it, as there is in the case of a father. It must in any case be borne in mind, that even if the view of JESSEL, M.R., be the correct one, yet if it be proved aliunde that the mother did in fact intend to benefit her offspring, there will be no resulting trust (y).

9. With regard to the presumption of advancement in favour of persons to whom the purchaser stands in loco parentis, it has been held that the presumption arose in the case of an illegitimate child (z), a grandchild when the father was dead (a), and the nephew of a wife who had been practically adopted by the husband as his child (b). But it would seem that the person alleged to have been in loco parentis must have intended to put himself in the situation of the person described as the natural father of the child with reference to those parental offices and duties which consist in making provision for a child. The mere fact that a grandfather took care of his daughter's illegitimate child and sent it to school, has been held to be insufficient to raise the presumption, Vice-Chancellor PAGE-WOOD saying: "I cannot put the doctrine so high as to hold that if a person educate a child to whom he is under no obligation either morally or legally, the child is therefore to be provided for at his expense" (c).

1. A. by his will gives his real estate unto and to the use of trustees, and his personal estate to them absolutely, upon trust for certain persons for life, with an ultimate remainder in trust for the testator's two nephews B. and C. as tenants in common. B. dies in the testator's lifetime. His share of the real estate will result to the testator's heir or residuary devisee, and his share of the personalty to the testator's next of kin or residuary legatees.

2. The preceding examples speak for themselves, and require no comment. But the following case presents at first sight more difficulty. A testator devises real estate to trustees, upon trust to sell and divide the proceeds between his nephews B. and C. If B. should die in the testator's lifetime, his share of the proceeds of the sale will lapse and result to the testator's heir or residuary devisee, and not to his next of kin or residuary legatees, although it is pure personalty. The principle on which this proceeds (settled by the leading case of Ackroyd v. Smithson (h)) is, that conversion directed by a will is presumed to be only intended for the purposes therein expressed; and so far as these purposes fail, equity presumes that the testator did not intend to rob his real representatives of property which, but for those objects, would have been theirs, and to give such property to his personal representatives, whose only possible ground of claim arises from the fact that the testator's expressed intentions have been disappointed. Moreover, this presumption is not even rebutted by a declaration that the proceeds of the sale of realty are to be personalty for all purposes (i), the latter words being construed as all purposes of the will.

Resulting trust where conversion directed.

3. The question was explained with his customary lucidity by the late Sir GEORGE JESSEL in the case of Curteis v. Wormald (k). There, personal estate had been bequeathed upon trust to purchase real estate, which was to be held on trusts, some of which eventually failed. It was held, that land, purchased before the failure, resulted in favour of the testator's next of kin, and not his heir. The Master of the Rolls, in giving judgment, after stating the facts, said: "The limitations took effect to a certain extent, and then, by reason of the failure of issue of the tenants for life, the ultimate limitations failed, and there became a [resulting] trust for somebody. Now for whom? According to the doctrine of the Court of Equity, this kind of conversion is a conversion for the purposes of the will, and does not affect the rights of the persons who take by law independent of the will. If, therefore, there is a trust to sell real estate for the purposes

Art. 23. of the will, and the trust takes effect, and there is an ultimate beneficial interest undisposed of, that undisposed-of interest goes to the heir. If, on the other hand, it is a conversion of personal estate into real estate, and there is an ultimate limitation which fails of taking effect, the interest which fails results for the benefit of the persons entitled to the personal estate; that is, the persons who take under the Statute of Distributions as next of kin (l). Their right to the residue of the personal estate is a statutory right independent of this will.

How the person to whom converted property results, holds it.

1. It is frequently an important question as to what nature property directed to be converted assumes in the hands of persons to whom it results. For instance, if, by a will, real estate be directed to be sold, and is actually sold, and the trusts as to one moiety of the proceeds fail, that moiety will of course result to the testator's heir. But the question then arises, does it become in his hands real or personal estate? That is to say, in the event of his death, does it devolve on his heir or his next of kin? At one time it was considered that there was a difference, as to this, between a resulting trust of converted realty, and a resulting trust of converted personalty. It was thought that as to the former, where a sale of realty was necessary for carrying out the subsisting trusts of a will, that which resulted to the heir was retained by him as personalty, and on his death devolved as such. So far, that is still the law. But it was also considered that, wherever personal estate directed to be converted into land resulted to next of kin, they held it as personalty, although it came to them in the form of land (m). This view was, however, scouted by JESSEL, M.R., and finally overruled by the Court of Appeal, in the case of Curteis v. Wormald (n). The Master of the Rolls said: "Then the next question which arises is, how does the heir-at-law in the first case, or the next of kin in the second, take the undisposed-of interest. The answer is, he takes it as he finds it. If the heir-at-law becomes entitled to it in the shape of personal estate, and dies, there is no equitable reconversion as between his real and personal representatives; and consequently his executor takes it as part of his personal estate. On the other hand, if the next of kin, having become entitled to a freehold estate [under a resulting trust of converted personalty], dies, there is no equity to change the freehold estate into anything else on his death. It will go to the devisee of the real estate, or to the heir-at-law if he has not devised it, and will pass as real estate." And Lord Justice JAMES, in the Court of Appeal, said: "With all deference to the judgment of Lord HATHERLEY in Reynolds v. Godlee (o), it is impossible, I think, to arrive at any other conclusion than that at which the Master of the Rolls has arrived. It was settled by Cogan v. Stephens (p), that what was the right rule as between the real and personal estates where land was directed to be sold, was also the right rule as between the two estates in the case where money was directed to be laid out in the purchase of land. . . . The same principle applies in both cases, which is this, that where you trace property into a man, there is no equity between his different classes of representatives as to altering the position in which that property is. If it is money arising from the sale of land, it remains money; that is to say, the heir-at-law of the person who has become beneficially entitled to it as heir-at-law, has no right to have it reconverted into land. If it is land purchased under a direction to invest in land, the persons interested in the personal estate of the persons who have become entitled to it as next of kin, have no right to have it reconverted into money "

2. The broad statement by the late Master of the Rolls in Curteis v. Wormald (quoted in the last illustration), that the party to whom property results "takes it as he finds it," is apt to mislead the unwary. It would be more accurate to say that he takes it as he ought to find it. That is to say, if the trust for conversion wholly fails, he takes it as unconverted; but if it only partially fails, then as the conversion dates from the death of the testator (even though it is directed to be made at a future date (q)), he takes it as converted, and

Art. 23. it devolves accordingly, notwithstanding that in point of fact the conversion is not, as it ought to be, carried out in accordance with the trust (r). A learned reviewer of the last edition of this work stated that he could not agree that this view applied to personal estate directed to be converted, and he contended that it was restricted to real estate directed to be sold (s). With great respect, however, and after full consideration, the present writer still remains of opinion that the decision of the late Mr. Justice CHITTY in Re Richerson, Scales v. Heyhoe (r), is as applicable to personal estate as to real estate.

applicable to
inter vivos.

3. It must be pointed out that precisely the same rule applies where property results on failure of trusts created by instrument inter vivos. As has been pointed out above, such property results to the settlor in the first instance; but the character in which he retains it is determined by precisely the same principles as have been indicated in the last illustration. That is to say, if the conversion ought to take place, that which results is retained in its converted form, notwithstanding that the actual conversion may not be carried out until after the settlor's death; but where there has been a total failure of the objects for which conversion was directed, it results to the settlor in its unconverted form, and so devolves.

to convert.

4. The reader must be warned that a mere power to convert, as distinguished from an imperative trust, does not effect any conversion (t). But if it be exercised, the property will then be converted, unless there be a trust declared of the proceeds sufficient to reconvert it (u), which is always a question of construction (x).

ART. 24.—Constructive Trusts of Profits made by Persons in Fiduciary Positions.

Where a person has the management of property, either as an express trustee, or as one of a succession of persons partially interested under a settlement, or as a guardian, or other person clothed with a fiduciary character, he is not permitted to gain any personal profit by availing himself of his position. If he does so, he will be constructive trustee of such profit for the benefit of the persons equitably entitled to the property.

On the expiration of the lease, the trustee applied for a renewal, but the lessor would not renew, on the ground that the infant could not enter into the usual covenants. Upon this, the trustee took a lease to himself for his own benefit; but it was decreed by Lord KING, that

3. And so also a tenant for life of leaseholds (even though they be held under a mere yearly tenancy (c)), who claims under a settlement, cannot renew them for his own sole benefit. For he is not permitted to avail himself of his position, as the person in possession under the settlement, to get a more durable term, and so to defeat the probable intentions of the settlor that the lease should be renewed for the benefit of all persons claiming under the settlement (d). And even where the lessor refuses to renew, the tenant for life or his assigns cannot purchase the lessor's interest for their own benefit, but will be considered as mere trustees of it for the persons who would be entitled to the leasehold interest if it had been renewed (e). In the recent case of Longton v. Wilsby (f), STIRLING, J., held that the above cases must be restricted to leases where there was a right of renewal either by custom or contract, but James v. Dean (c), does not seem to have been cited, and his lordship's decision does not seem to be consistent with the judgment of Lord ELDON in that case.

for the purchaser; the purchaser is the real beneficial owner in the eye of a court of equity of the property; subject only to this observation, that the vendor (whom I have called a trustee) is not a mere dormant trustee; he is a trustee having a personal and substantial interest in the property, a right to protect that interest, and an active right to assert that interest if anything should be done in derogation of it. The relation, therefore, of trustee and cestui que trust subsists, but subsists subject to the paramount right of the vendor and trustee to protect his own interest as vendor of the property." He is, however, only trustee pro tanto, and his duties are strictly matter of contract (u).

2. In the converse case, where the vendor has actually conveyed the property, but the purchaser has not paid the purchase-money, or has only paid part of it, the vendor has a lien upon the property for the unpaid portion (x); and the purchaser will hold the estate as a trustee pro tanto, unless by his acts or declarations the vendor has plainly manifested his intention to rely not upon the estate, but upon some other security, or upon the personal credit of the individual (y). A mere collateral security will not, however, suffice (z); but where it appears that a bond, covenant, mortgage or annuity was itself the actual consideration—the thing bargained for—and not merely a collateral security for the purchase-money (a), there will be no lien, and consequently no trust.

3. It need scarcely be pointed out that a mortgagor, in the case of an equitable mortgage, is pro tanto a trustee for the mortgagee. For even where there is no written memorandum, a deposit of title deeds is of itself evidence of an

Art. 25. — agreement for the mortgage of the property (b); and in accordance with the maxim, that “equity regards that as done which ought to be done,” the mortgagor holds the legal estate, in trust to execute a legal mortgage to the mortgagee.

Devolution of mortgaged property. 4. Upon the death of a mortgagee, the mortgaged property (if assured to him in fee) descended at law before 1882 to his heir; but being in reality only a security for money, it equitably belonged to his personal representatives, and the heir was, therefore, held to be a mere trustee for the administrators or executors of the mortgagee (c).

Mortgagee in possession. 5. So a mortgagee in possession is constructively a trustee of the rents and profits, and bound to apply them in a due course of administration (d). But there has been considerable conflict of opinion as to the extent of his responsibility. For instance, it has been held that he is liable even after transferring the mortgage without the mortgagor’s consent (e); but this decision has been questioned, and, it is respectfully apprehended, rightly so (f). In another case, it was said that a mortgagee in possession who, after the mortgagor’s death, bought up the widow’s right to dower, was obliged to hold it in trust for the heir, upon his paying the purchase-money (g); and although this case has called forth much comment (h), it is difficult to distinguish it in principle from the class of cases considered in the last article.

Limited owners paying off charge 6. Another important illustration of the rule now under consideration occurs when a limited owner (e.g. a tenant for life) pays off a specific (i) incumbrance out of his own money. In such a case (in the absence of evidence showing an intention to extinguish the incumbrance) he is held to be, in equity, in the position of a transferee of the incumbrance, notwithstanding that he took an ordinary reconveyance (k); and, on his death, the remainderman holds the legal estate subject to the equitable lien or charge so created (l). On the same ground, it has been held that a tenant for life under a settlement comprising shares in a company, has a lien on the shares for repayment, with interest, of advances made at the request of the trustees, for the purpose of paying calls (m). It would seem, however, that where income has been expended in improving property, the court (apart from the Improvement of Land and the Settled Land Acts) has no jurisdiction to declare the expenditure a charge on the property (n).

on inheritance or calls on shares.

7. Considerable difficulty frequently arises with regard to the question whether an agent is a trustee for his principal. The point generally arises either in reference to the Statutes of Limitation, or to the application of the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), in relation to the attachment of defaulting trustees. It is submitted that where property is handed to an agent either for investment, sale, safe custody (o), or otherwise, then he is a trustee of that property (p). But where an agent merely collects rents, or debts, or the like on commission or receives illicit commissions, the relation of trustee and cestui que trust does not generally arise, unless the agency is of an exceptionally fiduciary character, the remedy of the principal being confined to a common law action for money had and received (q). As CHITTY, J., said in Piddocke v. Burt (q), "it is not every agent who is Confidential agents."

Art. 25. fiduciary." Thus a partner who collected debts due to the firm, and misapplied the money so collected, was held not to be liable as a trustee. So directors of a company, although "they have been always considered and treated as trustees of money which comes to their hands or which is under their control," (r) are not liable as trustees for carelessness,—as for instance, for accepting shares in another company in lieu of cash (r). But on the other hand, an auctioneer is a trustee of a deposit paid to him (s); so is a broker of stock handed to him for sale (t). A solicitor to whom money is handed for investment (u), a solicitor of a mortgagee who receives purchase-moneys arising under an exercise of his client's power of sale (x), land agents, bailiffs, and receivers are all fiduciary agents (y). But a solicitor employed to get in a debt, and who ought to hand it over at once to his client, is curiously enough not a trustee of it (z).

Partnership
liens.

8. So, again, where the plaintiff was induced by fraud of the defendant to purchase a share of his business, and to enter into partnership with him, and judgment was given for the rescission of the agreement and the dissolution of the partnership, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled in respect of the purchase-money which he had paid, to a lien on the surplus of the partnership assets after satisfying the partnership debts and liabilities; and that, in respect of any sums which he had paid or might pay in satisfaction of partnership debts, he was entitled to stand in the place of the partnership creditors to whom he had made the payments (a).

So where one partner wrongfully sells the partnership securities, he is a trustee of the proceeds (b).

9. Upon similar principles, a court of equity converts a party who has obtained property by fraud "into a trustee for the party who is injured by that fraud (c). But, that being a jurisdiction founded on personal fraud, it is incumbent on the court to see that a fraud, or malus animus, is proved by the clearest and most indisputable evidence; it is impossible to supply presumption in the place of proof" (d).

Art. 25.

10. So where the shareholders of a company receive capital ultra vires, they are trustees of it for the company (e); and a fortiori the directors are liable as trustees who have misapplied trust funds (f).

Capital of company distributed ultra vires.

11. So, again, where a stranger to a trust receives money or property from the trustee which he knows (1) to be part of the trust estate, and (2) to be paid or handed to him in breach of the trust, he is a constructive trustee of it for the persons equitably entitled, but not otherwise (g). This question of the responsibility of third parties as constructive trustees is more fully discussed in Division IV., Chap. III., infra.

ART. 26.—Disclaimer of a Trust.

No one is bound to accept the office of trustee (a). Both the office and the estate may be disclaimed before acceptance, in the case of a married woman by deed (b), and in other cases by deed or by conduct tantamount to a dis-

1. Thus, even though a person may have agreed in the lifetime of a testator to be his executor, he is still at liberty to recede from his promise at any time before proving the will (f). Consent to undertake future trust not binding.

2. A prudent man will, of course, always disclaim by deed, in order that there may be no question of the fact; but a disclaimer by counsel at the bar, or even by conduct inconsistent with acceptance, is sufficient (g). For instance, in Stacey v. Elph (h), a person, named as executor and trustee under a will, did not formally renounce probate until after the death of the acting executor, nor formally disclaim the trusts of the will; but he purchased a part of the real estate, and took a conveyance from the tenant for life, and the heir-at-law in whom the estate could only vest by the disclaimer of the trust. It was held, under these circumstances, that he had by his conduct disclaimed the office and estate of trustee under the will. Methods of disclaiming.

3. In Re Ellison's Trusts (i), Sir W. PAGE WOOD, V.-C., expressed some doubt whether a freehold estate could be disclaimed by parol, or otherwise than by deed. His honour's attention does not appear, however, to have been called to Stacey v. Elph, and in the more recent case of Re Gordon, Gordon v. Roberts (k), where real estate was devised to trustees upon trust to sell and to form a mixed Deed of disclaimer not necessary.

Lastly, in Re Birchall, Birchall v. Ashton (l), the Court of Appeal held that a trustee had by conduct disclaimed the office, and that having disclaimed the office, he must of necessity have also disclaimed the estate.

ART. 27.—Acceptance of a Trust.

A person may accept the office of trustee expressly; or he may do so constructively by doing such acts as are only referable to the character of trustee or executor (m); or he may do so by long acquiescence.

3. So, exercising any act of ownership, such as advertising the property for sale, giving notice to the tenants to pay the rents to himself or an agent, or requesting the steward of a manor to enrol a deed in relation to the trust property, is sufficient to constitute acceptance of a trust (r). Art. 27.
Acceptance by exercise of dominion.

4. So, where the office of executor is clothed with certain trusts, or where the executor is also nominated the trustee of real estate under a will, he is construed to have accepted the office of trustee if he takes out probate to the will (s). And acceptance of the trusts of a will was, prior to 1882, constructive acceptance of the office of trustee of estates, devised thereby, of which the testator was trustee (t). But now trust estates (except copyholds) cannot be so devised, but vest in the executors virtute officii (u). Acceptance by taking out probate.

5. In Conyngham v. Conyngham (x), one Coleman was appointed trustee of a will, but he never expressly accepted the appointment. One of the trusts was in respect of the rents of a plantation then in lease to the testator's son. Coleman acted as the agent of the son, who was also heir-at-law, and received the rents of the estate from him. It was held that, by so interfering with the trust property, he could not repudiate the trust, and say that he merely acted as the son's agent. He received the rents, and it was incumbent on him, if he would not have acted as trustee, to have expressly disclaimed, and not to leave himself at liberty to say he acted as trustee or not. It is, however, not every interference with trust property which will be construed as an acceptance of the office of trustee; for if such interference be plainly (not ambiguously) referable to some other ground, it will not operate as an acceptance (y); Acceptance by conduct.

ART. 28.—Cases in which the Trustee takes any Estate.

(1) Where the trust is a simple trust, and the trust property is of freehold tenure, then, in consequence of (or in the case of wills by analogy to) the Statute of Uses, the trustee takes no estate unless the property be limited to his use, or unless there be a clear intention to vest an estate in him. But where the trust is a special trust, the statute does not apply, and the trustee will take a legal estate of some duration.

(2) Where the trust property is of copyhold or leasehold tenure, or is pure personalty, the Statute of Uses is inapplicable, and the trustee takes a legal estate of some duration, whether the trust be simple or special.

(3) This article has no application where the legal estate is outstanding.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

1. Thus, where the legal estate in freeholds is limited to trustees, and the words used are "in trust to pay to" a specified person the rents and profits, there the trustees ^{Trust to permit beneficiaries to receive rents.}

Art. 28. take the legal estate, because they must receive before they can pay. But where the words are "in trust to permit and suffer A. B. to take the rents and profits," there the legal estate passes directly to the party beneficially entitled, the purposes not requiring that it should remain in the trustees (a).

Trust to permit beneficiary to receive net rents.

2. Where, however, the trustees are to permit and suffer the beneficiary to receive the net or clear rents and profits, the trustees take the legal estate; it being presumed that the trustees are to take the gross rents, and after payment of outgoings, to hand over the net rents to the beneficiary (b).

Trust to pay or permit beneficiary to receive.

3. Where the language is ambiguous, and may be read either as implying a simple or a special trust, it has been said that the question must be determined according to the general rules of construction. Thus, in Doe v. Biggs (c), it was decided that the words "to pay or permit him to receive" would, if contained in a deed, create a special trust, inasmuch as of two inconsistent expressions in a deed the first prevails; whereas the same words occurring in a will would create a simple trust, as a testator's last words are preferred. However, this case cannot be relied on. As LINDLEY, L.J., said in a recent case (d), "I do not think it is a sensible decision. I do not think that case could be possibly so decided now if the question arose for the first time; and I am not disposed to extend it. On the other hand, I do not wish to shake titles; and I shall do precisely what our predecessors have always done—leave the case where it is." BOWEN, L.J., went even further, saying, "I agree with the late Master of the Rolls that the case is not one the precedent of which is really applicable to other cases. In most cases, there is sure to be a context which displaces the conclusion at which the court arrived in that instance." The reader is therefore warned that Doe v. Biggs cannot be safely relied upon as a precedent. Nevertheless Art. 28. it was recently followed by STIRLING, J., in Re Adams and Perry (e). —

4. So, again, where the trustees are to exercise any control or discretion they take some estate. For instance, where the beneficiary is empowered to give receipts for the rents with the approbation of the trustees (f), or the trust is for the separate use of a married woman (in cases where the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), does not apply), who consequently requires protection, the trustees take the legal estate (g); at all events, where the trust is created by will. But where it was created by deed the common law courts, not recognizing the separate estate of a feme covert, held that such a trust was a simple trust, and therefore came within the Statute of Uses (h). Whether, however, this would now be followed having regard to the Judicature Acts seems more than questionable. It is, however, apprehended that in cases to which the Married Women's Property Act applies the trustee would now take no legal estate, because the power of the husband no longer exists. Control or discretion in trustees.

5. Where property was devised to trustees charged with payment of debts, and subject thereto in trust for A., there, as the trustees were not directed to pay the debts, they had no duties, and consequently took no estate (i). It is, however, suggested that in the case of wills coming into operation since Lord St. Leonard's Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 14), this might not be so, as in such cases that Act casts the duty of selling the property on them. Anyhow they always took the legal estate if they had to pay the debts (k). Charge of debts.

Art. 28.

Freeholds or
one trust.

6. In Houston v. Hughes (l), it was held that (notwithstanding the Statute of Uses), under a devise of freeholds and copyholds to A. and his heirs, in trust for B. and his heirs, the circumstance that A. took an estate in the copyholds was an argument in favour of an intention that he should take the legal estate in the freeholds. However, this doctrine was dissented from by JESSEL, M.R., in Baker v. White (m), and it is clear that even if it could be supported in the case of a will, a similar limitation in a deed would be construed far more strictly.

trustees.

7. So, where lands are devised unto and to the use of trustees in trust for B., the trustees take the legal estate irrespective of any active trust (n).

Trust to
beneficiaries.

8. Again, even where the active trust is of a trivial description, yet, if it implies an intention to vest the legal estate in the trustee, effect will be given to that intention. Thus, if a testator devises Greenacre to A. and B. and their heirs, upon trust forthwith to convey and assure the same to C. in fee, A. and B. will take the legal estate, for they have an active duty to perform, viz., to convey it to C. (o).

Power of

9. A devise to trustees upon trust for A. for life, with remainder to B. in fee, followed by a power to sell, lease, or mortgage, vests the legal estate in the trustees, for the exercise of the power might become an active duty (p).

ART. 29.—The Quantity of Estate taken by the Trustee of Lands.

Art. 29.

Whenever, under the preceding article, a trustee takes a legal estate of some kind in land, the quantity of that estate is determined by the following principles :

- (1) If the settlement is a deed, it will be construed strictly, and the estate of the trustee will not be enlarged or diminished by any reference to the exact estate required to carry out the trust (q), unless a strict construction would lead to an inconsistency (r).
- (2) If the settlement is a will dated before the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), the legal estate given to a trustee will be enlarged or diminished to such an estate as will enable him to perform the trusts; and if no words of limitation are used, the estate will be limited to a definite or indefinite term of years, unless the trust requires the trustee to take the fee (s).
- (3) If the settlement is a will executed since the Wills Act, an indefinite devise to a trustee primâ facie passes the fee simple, or other the whole estate of the testator; and if the trusts by their nature extend over an indefinite period, that presumption is irrebuttable. But if, on the face of the will, it is apparent that an estate pur autre vie would certainly enable the trustee to fulfil all the trusts, he will take that estate only, notwithstanding a limitation to him and his heirs, unless there is a clear intention expressed that he shall take the fee or some other defined estate (t).

1. In Colmore v. Tyndall (u), under a deed, lands were limited to the use of A. for life, with remainder to the use of B. and his heirs during the life of A., to support contingent remainders, remainder to the use of C. for life, remainder to the same B. and his heirs during the life of C. to support contingent remainders, remainder to the first and other sons of C. in tail male, remainder to divers other uses, (t) Paragraph (3) of this article is intended and believed to give the effect of ss. 30 and 31 of the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26). By the first of these sections it is enacted, that where any real estate (other than or not being a presentation to a church) shall be devised to any trustee or executor, such devise shall be construed to pass the fee simple, or other the whole estate or interest which the testator had power to dispose of by will, in such real estate, unless a definite terms of years absolute or determinable, or an estate of freehold, shall be given to him expressly or by implication. Section 31 enacts, that where any real estate shall be devised to a trustee without any express limitation of the estate to be taken by such trustee, and the beneficial interest in such real estate, or in the surplus rents and profits thereof, shall not be given to any person for life, or shall be given for life, but the purposes of the trust may continue beyond the life of such person, such devise shall be construed to vest in such trustee the fee simple or other the whole legal estate which the testator had power to dispose of by will, and not an estate determinable when the purposes of the trust shall be satisfied. Both these sections have been subjected to much criticism, and, strange and almost incredible as it may appear, it is believed that the real history of the two sections is, that they were drafted as alternative ones, but, by some carelessness, were both allowed to remain in the Act when passed (see per JESSEL, M.R., Freame v. Clement, 18 Ch. D. 514). Their meaning is by no means clear; but it is apprehended that their effect is as above stated (see Lew. 217; Shelford's R. P. Stats. 432; 2 Jar. Wills, 321; Hawkin's Wills, 30).

remainder to the said B. and his heirs (without saying during the life of the tenant for life) to support and preserve contingent remainders, with divers remainders over. The question arose whether, under the last limitation to B. and his heirs, he took the fee simple, or whether he only took that which was necessary for the purpose of the trust, namely, an estate pur autre vie. But the court held that it was not a sufficient ground for restricting an estate limited by deed to a trustee and his heirs, to an estate for life, that the estate given to the trustee seemed to be larger than was essential to its purpose.

Art. 29.

2. But even in a deed, where there are limitations which, on a strict construction, would be inconsistent and repugnant, the court will, by supplying obviously omitted words, endeavour to carry out the intention. Thus in Curtis v. Price (x), the facts were as follows: A deed of settlement purported to convey freeholds to P. and J. and their heirs, to the use of M. for life; remainder to the use of E. (his wife) during widowhood; but if she should marry again, to the use of P. and J. and their heirs, in trust out of the rents to pay E. an annuity, and to apply the residue to the maintenance of the children of M. and E.; with remainder, after the decease of the survivor of M. and E., to the use of P. and J. for 1,000 years, upon divers trusts. It was held that, as the limitation of the 1,000 years' term to P. and J. was absolutely inconsistent with an intention to give them the fee, the limitation to them and their heirs must be cut down to an estate during the life of E.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF PARAGRAPHS (2) AND (3).

1. If the limitations stated in the first illustration on p. 144 had been declared by a will, whether executed before or since the Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), instead of by a deed, the decision would clearly have been different. Thus, if lands are devised to trustees and their heirs, upon trust to pay the net rents to A. for life, and after A.'s death in trust for B., the trustees, notwithstanding the words of inheritance, only

Art. 29. take an estate pur autre vie (viz., during A.'s life); for the active trust reposed in them ends with the life of A., and consequently the purposes of their trust do not require them to take a larger estate (y).

Larger estate not implied to rectify testator's mistake.

2. Nor will the court imply a larger estate (where it is not necessary to carry out the definite trusts of the will), on the ground that by doing so effect would incidentally be given to the testator's intentions. Thus, if freeholds be given to A. for life, with remainder to trustees and their heirs in trust to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to the heirs of A., it is obvious that if the trustees could be held to take the fee in reversion expectant on A.'s life estate, the rule in Shelley's Case would be rendered inapplicable, and the obvious intention of the testator to give A. a mere life interest would be preserved. But notwithstanding this, the court holds that the trustees only take an estate pur autre vie, that being sufficient to enable them to preserve contingent remainders, which alone was the object of the trust reposed in them (z).

Estate in trustee to preserve contingent remainder not implied.

3. On similar grounds, the court will not imply a larger estate in the trustees than the trust requires, merely because, if they took such larger estate, it would support a contingent remainder, and so prevent it from failing for want of a particular estate of freehold (a).

Direction to pay rents to married women.

4. On the other hand, where, by will, the rents of certain lands (which are not expressly devised to anyone) are directed to be paid to a married woman's separate use, by the testator's executors, there is an implied devise to the executors of such an estate in the land as will enable them to execute the trust (b), viz., an estate pur autre vie.

Trusts requiring a fee simple imply that estate.

5. So if land be devised to trustees without any words of limitation by a will executed since the Wills Act, 1837

(1 Vict. c. 26), and they are expressly directed to sell (c), or impliedly authorised to do so (d) (as by a direction to pay debts (e)), whether certainly or contingently, or are authorised to lease or to mortgage (f), or to allow maintenance to infants during a period of suspended vesting (g), or to do any other act which requires the complete control over the property (h), the trustees will take an estate in fee simple, or other the whole estate which the testator could dispose of. With regard, however, to wills executed before the Wills Act, 1837, this would not have been so except under a direction to sell (i): for a trust to mortgage or lease, or a trust to maintain infants, could equally have been carried out by a trustee who had merely an indefinite term of years (k).

Art. 29.

6. And so, too, the trustees will take the fee simple where there is a clear intention to give it them, notwithstanding that a less estate would certainly enable them to perform the trust. Thus, if lands be devised unto and to the use of A. and his heirs, in trust for B. and his heirs, A. takes the legal fee simple (l), because there can be no other meaning given to the words used. But a devise unto and to the use of A. and his heirs, in trust for A. for life, and after A.'s death a direct devise to C., gives the trustees merely an estate during the life of A. (m); for the remainder is not limited by way of trust.

And STIRLING, J., intimated that even if the power of appointment had not been executed he should have held that the ultimate gift to A. in fee was equitable and not an executory legal devise (n).

Trust to convey to another.

8. Where a testator devises property to trustees and their heirs, upon trust to pay the net rents to A. for life, and after his death upon trust to convey the property to B. in fee simple, the direction to convey constitutes a special and active trust, which necessarily implies that the trustees should have the legal fee in them; for non dat qui non habet (o).

Recurring trusts.

9. And where there are recurring trusts which require the legal estate to be in the trustees, with intervening limitations which, taken alone, would vest the legal estate in the persons beneficially entitled, and there is no repetition before each of the recurring trusts of the gift of the legal estate to the trustees, the legal estate is held to be in the trustees throughout, and the intermediate estates are equitable and not legal (p). To show the importance of this principle, it is well to refer to the leading case of Harton v. Harton (p). There the limitations were to trustees, in trust for A. for life for her separate use, remainder to the heirs of her body, remainder to B. for life for her separate use, with remainder to the heirs of her body. Here the separate use gave the trustees an estate during A.'s life, and also during B.'s life; but had it not been for this last trust, they would not have taken the legal estate during the intermediate trust in favour of the heirs of A.'s body. As, however, there was a recurring trust, they did so; and, therefore, as the estate of A., and the estate given to the heirs of her body, were both equitable estates, the rule in Shelley's Case applied, and A. took an estate tail. Harton v. Harton has been lately followed by the House of Lords in Van Grutten v. Foxwell (q), where precisely the same point arose. Art. 29.

10. In Collier v. Walters (r) a testator, by will dated before the Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), devised his estate to trustees and their heirs, upon trust that they and their heirs should stand seised of the same during the life of W. C., and also until the whole of the testator's debts and the legacies thereafter mentioned were paid, upon trust to let the same, and apply the rents in discharge of his debts, after payment of which, they were to apply the rents in payment of legacies, and finally hold the property upon trust to pay the rents to W. C. and his assigns during his life. And after the decease of W. C. and payment of the debts and legacies and all expenses, the testator devised the property to the heirs of the body of W. C., with remainders over. In 1830, W. C., relying on the rule in Shelley's Case, suffered a common recovery and barred the entail. Upon his right to do this coming in question, Sir GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., held, that the trustees took the legal fee, and that consequently, W. C., under the rule in Shelley's Case, took an equitable estate tail.

She subsequently died without having appointed, and without heirs; and it was held that, there being holders of the legal estate—namely, the trustees—the Crown could not claim by escheat, and that the trustees (no person remaining who could sue them in equity) retained, as the legal proprietors, the beneficial interest also.

3. The rule also applied to a constructive trustee. Thus, a mortgagee in fee, whose mortgagor died intestate and without heirs, took the property absolutely, subject to the mortgagor's debts (q). Whether this would have been the case if the mortgagee had been a mere equitable mortgagee seems to be more doubtful; but it is submitted that, on the principle of Onslow v. Wallis (p), the result would have been the same as if he were the legal mortgagee. Old law applied to constructive trustees.

4. However, the foregoing illustrations have no application where the person to whom the property would have resulted has died, without heirs and intestate, since August 14th, 1884. For by the Intestates' Estates Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 71), s. 4, it is enacted that— New law.

ART. 33.—Duty of Trustee on acceptance of Trust.

A trustee must acquaint himself, as soon as possible, with the nature and circumstances of the trust property, obtain, where necessary, a transfer of the trust property to himself, and, subject to the provisions of the settlement, get in trust money invested on insufficient or hazardous security (a).

A person who undertakes to act as a trustee, takes upon himself serious and onerous duties; and when, as too often happens, he adopts a "policy of masterly inactivity," he entirely misapprehends the nature of the office to which he has been appointed. As KEKEWICH, J., said, in Hallows v. Lloyd (b), "What are the duties of persons becoming new trustees of a settlement? Their duties are quite onerous enough, and I am not prepared to increase them. I think that when persons are asked to become new trustees, they are bound to inquire of what the property consists that is proposed to be handed over to them, and what are the trusts. They ought also to look into the trust documents and papers, to ascertain what notices appear among them of incumbrances and other matters affecting the trust."

A trustee is, however, not liable for mere ignorance of a material fact, if he could not have become acquainted with its existence from materials at his disposal (c). For trustees are not insurers, and their conduct ought to be regarded with reference to the facts and circumstances existing at the time when they have to act, and which are known, or which ought to be known, by them at that time (d).

ILLUSTRATIONS.

1. Thus a new trustee's first duty is to ascertain that the trust fund is properly invested, and that his predecessors have not committed breaches of trust which ought to be set right. For if, through not inquiring into such matters, the trust estate should suffer, he may be liable, although he himself took no part, and could have taken no part, in committing the original breaches of trust (e). It would seem, however, that where the old trustees had claims against third parties (e.g., against their solicitor for negligence), the new trustees cannot sue the third parties but must go to the court for directions (f).

2. A trustee who leaves the trust fund in the sole name, or under the sole control, of his co-trustee, will be liable if it be lost (g).

3. A trustee who keeps money for an unreasonable length of time without investing it, is liable if it be lost, however pure his motives may have been (h).

4. A new trustee is liable to make good moneys paid by him bonâ fide to a beneficiary, if the papers relating to the trust comprise a notice of an incumbrance created by that beneficiary depriving him of the right to receive the money. For if the trustee had acquainted himself, as he was bound to do, with the trust documents and papers, he would have found what the true state of the case was (i). Where, however, no amount of search would have disclosed the notice, the trustee would of course not be liable, as his liability entirely depends upon his shirking the duty of search, which the law casts upon him (j). Moreover, he is not bound to inquire of the old trustees whether they have received notice of any incumbrances (k). Nor is he liable if he honestly, but erroneously (e.g., from forgetfulness), informs an intended incumbrancer that he has no knowledge of any prior incumbrance (l).

ART. 34.—Duty of Trustee to obey the Directions of the Settlement.

A trustee must fulfil the purposes of the trust, and obey the directions of the settlement, except so far as these directions—

- (a) are modified by the consent of all the beneficiaries, or by the authority of a competent court; or

(b) are impracticable, illegal, or manifestly injurious to the beneficiaries. Art. 34.

This is the most important of all the rules relating to the duties of trustees. It is founded on common sense, and overshadows and modifies all other rules, which must be read as if they contained an expressed declaration that they are subject to any provisions to the contrary contained in the settlement itself. As will be seen, however, in Articles 55 and 56, the rule is subject to modification, if all parties beneficially interested are sui juris, and concur in putting an end to or amending the trust. For the beneficiaries collectively, being the only parties beneficially interested, are entitled, at any moment, to depose the trustee, and distribute the trust property between themselves as they may think fit. The rule is also subject to the power of the court to interpose on behalf of parties beneficially interested, who are not sui juris; and of course, as we have seen (m), it is not binding upon a trustee where the directions of the settlement are illegal. Another exception necessarily arises where the directions of the settlement are impracticable (e.g., if it directs an immediate sale, and no purchaser can be found). Lastly, an exception arises where it would be manifestly injurious to the beneficiaries to carry out the directions contained in the settlement.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

1. If trustees are, by the settlement, directed to call in trust moneys, and to lay them out on a purchase, and they fail to do so, and the fund is lost, they are liable for the loss (n). Neglect to purchase where directed to do so.

2. So, if a trustee for sale omits to sell property when it ought to be sold, and it is afterwards lost, although without any default on his part, he is liable for the loss, which would not have happened had he not failed in performing an obvious duty (o). Neglect to sell, where directed to invest on

securities.

3. So, where the settlement orders trust funds to be invested on particular securities, the trustees are bound to invest in such securities or in those prescribed by statute (as to which, see infra, Article 40). But it would seem that if they are directed to invest in specified securities and none other, they may not even now invest in the securities authorised by the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 1, the powers of which are only exercisable if not forbidden by the settlement (p). The former, repealed, statutory power contained no such restriction (q). It has been held by KEKEWICH, J., that where trustees were directed to set apart a sum of money to answer an annuity "in any of the investments in which the proceeds of sale and conversion of my estate is hereby authorised," they were restricted to the securities authorised by the will, and impliedly forbidden to invest in securities authorised by the Act: sed quære (r).

Must observe conditions imposed on their dis-
powers.

4. So, where there are any conditions attached to the exercise of any of their functions, they must strictly perform those conditions. For instance, where they are authorised to lend to a husband with the consent of his wife, they cannot make the advance without first getting the required consent, even though they subsequently get it (s).

5. So where trustees were empowered to vary investments "with the consent of the tenant for life," and they sold consols, and first made an investment with such consent upon a contributory mortgage (which was not an authorised security), and subsequently called the money in, and without such consent reinvested it upon a mortgage which was an authorised one, it was held that, although there was no loss of capital, they were nevertheless bound to replace the consols which had since risen in price. For they sold the consols for the purpose of investing in an unauthorised security, which was contrary to the directions of the settlement; and then when they realised that investment, they reinvested the proceeds without the consent of the tenant for life, which was again contrary to the directions of the settlement. In both transactions, therefore, they disobeyed the rule now under consideration, and consequently committed breaches of trust, and were bound to place the beneficiaries in the same position as they would have occupied if no such breach had been committed (t).

Art. 34.

6. On the same principle, where an estate is given in trust for A. for life, and after his death upon trust for sale, the trustees cannot sell during the life of A., even with A.'s consent, unless of course all parties beneficially interested in remainder are sui juris and consent. For the settlor has prescribed the time at which the sale is to be made, and the trustees must follow out his direction (u). Indeed, it has been held, that even the court has no jurisdiction to order an earlier sale (x); although, of course, if the trust were being administered by the court, and the court did in point of fact order an earlier sale, the trustee would not be liable for obeying the order, and the purchaser would get a good title under s. 70 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41). It must also be pointed out that, notwithstanding such a trust, and notwithstanding the consequent inability of the trustees to sell during the life tenancy, it is now competent for the tenant for life himself to sell, under the provisions of the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, and to cause the purchase-money to be paid to the trustees, they being (by virtue of their future trust for sale) trustees for purposes of those Acts, under s. 16 of the Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69). But a premature sale by trustees cannot be forced on an unwilling purchaser simply because all the beneficiaries are willing to concur (y).

Art. 35.

ART. 35.—Duty of Trustee to act impartially between the Beneficiaries.

A trustee must be impartial in the execution of his trust, and not exercise his powers so as to confer an advantage on one beneficiary at the expense of another. In particular, where the capital of the trust property is in any way augmented, the augmentation accrues for the benefit of all the beneficiaries, and is accordingly to be treated as capital, and not as income (a).

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Powers of sale and purchase

1. Thus, where trustees are empowered to sell real estate and to lay out the proceeds in the purchase of another estate, they would not be justified in selling to promote the exclusive interest of the tenant for life; but they must look to the intention of the settlement, and whether another and better purchase is practicable, and not merely probable; or at all events there must be some strong reasons of family prudence (b).

Trust to raise debts by sale of land.

2. Conversely, if lands be devised to trustees upon trust to sell so much as may be required for payment of debts, and subject thereto upon trust for divers persons successively without impeachment of waste, the trustees must not raise the money by sale of the timber, for that would be a hardship on the tenant for life (c).

Trustees should not purchase woodland estate.

3. Where money is directed to be laid out in the purchase of land to be settled on a person for life, the trustees should not purchase an estate with an overwhelming proportion of trees on it. For if the tenant for life be impeachable for waste, he would lose the fruit of so much as was the value of the timber; and if he be not impeachable, he could, by felling the timber, possess himself of a great part of the corpus of the trust property (d). Art. 35.

4. Under a similar trust to the foregoing, trustees should not purchase mining property, nor an advowson, both of which might give an undue preference to one beneficiary (e). Trustees should not purchase mining property or advowson.

5. Again, where trustees have a choice of investments, they must not exercise that choice for the sole benefit of the tenant for life by investing upon a more productive but less secure property (f). And where any change of investment is to be made with the consent of the tenant for life, and he improperly withholds his consent, the court will compel him to give it (g). Choice of investments.

6. On the principle enunciated in the article now under consideration, trustees must not threaten to exert their influence with third parties to the prejudice of one of their beneficiaries, in order to coerce him into consenting to a disposition of the trust property more favourable to another of the beneficiaries than would be the case if the settlement were strictly performed (h). Trustee must not exert influence against the interest of a beneficiary.

7. Where a company, out of a reserve fund, creates new capital, and allots it gratis among the old shareholders, any shares so allotted to trustees will be held by them as capital, and will not belong to the person entitled to the trust income (i). Augmentation of capital.

8. So where bonuses are paid as part of capital, they will be retained by the trustee; but where bonuses are mere expressions for extra dividends, this will not be the case. As Lord Justice Fry said in Re Bouch, Sproule v. Bouch (k), Bonuses.

Art. 35. in a passage quoted with approval by Lord HERSCHELL in giving judgment on the same case in the House of Lords (l), "When a testator or settlor directs or permits the subject of his disposition to remain as shares or stocks in a company which has the power either of distributing its profits as dividend or of converting them into capital, and the company validly exercises this power, such exercise of its power is binding on all persons interested in the shares under the testator or settlor; and consequently what is paid by the company as dividend goes to the tenant for life, and what is paid by the company to the shareholder as capital, or appropriated as an increase of the capital stock in the concern, enures to the benefit of all who are interested in the capital" (m). The bonus of a quarter per cent. which was offered to the holders of consols and reduced threes as an inducement to convert their holdings into new $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cents., was by the National Debt (Conversion) Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 2), s. 10, specially declared to be income and not capital.

9. It need scarcely be pointed out that where, on a change of investment, trust securities realize more than was given for them originally, the profit accrues to capital, and is not considered as income payable to the tenant for life. In the same way, where trustees of a mortgage debt foreclose, and subsequently sell the property for more than the debt and arrears of interest and costs, the balance is to be held by them as an augmentation to the capital of the trust fund. For as any diminution of the trust property would have to be borne by all the beneficiaries, and would not fall on the tenant for life only, so it is only fair that any casual augmentation should belong to all, and not merely to the life tenant.

pending conversion, the income actually produced should be treated as income. Part of the residue consisted of shares in a company with £8 per share paid up. The company was reconstructed, and the new company paid £9 5s. for each of the old shares. The £1 5s. was the proceeds partly of the regular reserve fund, and partly of profits which the directors had retained to meet contingencies:—Held, that the right of a tenant for life of shares is only to receive dividends and bonuses in the shape of dividends, and that, although the £1 5s. was profits, it was under the circumstances not payable as income (n).

Art. 35.

11. The question sometimes arises, whether trustees can safely pay the share of one beneficiary who has attained a vested interest in possession, before paying the other beneficiaries who may not have attained a vested interest, or whose shares, by reason of incapacity or otherwise, are not presently payable. If he does so, it may happen that by reason of subsequent depreciation of securities, the balance retained by the trustee may be insufficient to pay the other beneficiaries in full, in which case the first beneficiary will have got more than the others. It appears, however, to be well settled that if, when the first payment was made, the trustees have, and retain in their hands, assets, which, fairly valued, are sufficient to meet shares which are not presently payable, but have to be held in trust, they are justified in paying other shares payable pari passu but payable at once, and are not liable if the assets so retained should, in the event, prove insufficient to pay the unpaid beneficiaries in full (o). For the conduct of trustees is regarded with reference to the facts and circumstances existing at the time when they have to act, and therefore, if they make the valuation impartially at the time, they are not liable for an unforeseen loss.

12. Another question sometimes arises—whether trustees of a will can treat their trust as severable into several trusts, Whether trustees can appropriate

appropriating specific securities to each, or whether they must treat the trust property as one undivided fund, until it becomes necessary, on the death of a life tenant, to pay and distribute his share among his children. For instance, where a testator settles money either in a specific sum or as a share of residue upon each of his daughters for life, with remainder for her children, ought the trustees to treat the daughters' fortunes as one trust, or as several? If a severance and appropriation of securities be lawful, it may sometimes be convenient; but on the other hand, the result may obviously be, that (by reason of the appreciation of one appropriated set of securities, or the depreciation of another, or by both such causes) one family may get less, and the other more than their due proportion of the entire fund. Where the form of the trust is a trust of specific sums (e.g., £1,000 to be held upon trust for a testator's daughter A. for life, with remainder for her children equally, and £1,000 to be held upon a similar trust for his daughter B. and her children), such appropriation is not only undoubtedly legitimate, but ought to be made (p). So where the form of the trust is to divide a testator's residuary estate between his children equally, the daughters' shares to be retained, and invested upon trust for them respectively for life, with remainder to their respective children, if, when the appropriation is made, the securities are fairly valued and fairly appropriated, there can be no objection; and when once the appropriation is made, the subsequent depreciation of one appropriated fund cannot be made good out of the appreciation of another (q). Moreover, it has recently been held by STIRLING, J., that even where the form of the trust is such, that no immediate severance into shares is directed until a share of corpus becomes distributable, an appropriation may be lawfully made, although the usual practice,

But an appropriation of securities is only valid if the appropriated securities were both authorised and sufficient at the date of the appropriation; see Re Waters, 1889, W. N. 39. It is not, however, necessary that where a trustee appropriates securities to one beneficiary he should contemporaneously appropriate to all (Re Richardson, [1896] 1 Ch. 512; Re Nickels, Nickels v. Nickels, [1898] 1 Ch. 630).

both of trustees and of the court itself (in the administration of estates and trusts), has been to make no appropriation in such cases (r).

Art. 35.

ART. 36.—Duty of Trustee to sell Wasting and Reversionary Property.

Where the trust is for the benefit of several persons in succession, and the trust property is of a wasting nature, or is a future or reversionary interest, the trustee must convert the property into property of a permanent and immediately profitable character, unless :—

- (a) the settlement contains a direction or implication to the contrary ; or
- (b) the settlement confers a discretion on the trustee to postpone such conversion, which he bonâ fide and impartially exercises : or,
- (c) the property in question is specifically settled.

The above rule, known as the rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth (s), is really only a corollary of the principle stated in Art. 35, viz., that the trustee must act impartially between the beneficiaries. For if wasting property (such as leaseholds, terminable annuities, and the like) were to be retained, the tenant for life would profit at the expense of the remaindermen ; and if reversionary property were not converted, the remaindermen would profit at the expense of the tenant for life. It must, however, be borne in mind that the rule is based upon an implied or presumed intention

- Art. 36. of the settlor, and not upon any intention actually expressed by him; and courts of equity have consequently always declined to apply the rule in cases where the settlor has indicated an intention that the property should be enjoyed in specie, though he may not, in a technical sense, have specifically said so. The real question, therefore, in all such cases, is, whether the settlor has, with sufficient distinctness, indicated his intention that the property should be enjoyed in specie (t); for the burden of showing this lies upon the party who desires that the rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth should not be applied (u).

Long annuities.

1. Where a testator's residuary estate was settled upon one for life, with remainders over, it was held that long, but terminable annuities, which formed part of it, ought to be sold, and the proceeds invested on permanent trust securities (x). On similar grounds where part of the estate consists of the intermediate income of a fund set apart to answer a future liability the intermediate income must be treated as capital (y).

Leaseholds.

2. A testator gave to his wife the whole of the interest arising from his property, both real and personal, during her life, with remainders over. He died possessed of leaseholds, among other property. It was held that the widow was not entitled to retain the leaseholds, but that they must be sold and the proceeds invested in stock (z).

Rule not applicable where contrary intention expressed.

3. As already stated, the rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth is subject to any contrary intention which may be expressed or implied in the settlement. Moreover, it is immaterial whether the contrary intention is imperatively expressed, or whether a discretion to convert or not is expressly given to the trustees; for the court will not interfere with a discretion so long as trustees exercise it in good faith (a). Thus, in one case a testator gave his residuary estate, which included several leasehold houses (held upon short terms), to trustees, upon trust to pay the income to his wife for life, with remainder to his grandchildren, and gave his trustees power to retain any portion of his property in the same state in which it should be at his decease, or to sell and convert the same as they should think fit. It was held that the special power to retain existing investments took the case out of the general rule as to conversion of perishable property, and that the trustees were at liberty to retain the short leaseholds, and any other investments held by the testator, for such period as they should think fit (b). And a similar decision was arrived at where a testator authorised his trustees to postpone the sale of his business (c).

4. So, again, where the testator devised wasting property to trustees, upon trust to sell "when in their discretion they should deem it advisable," it was held that the trustees were not bound to sell until they deemed meet (d). Discretion given to trustees.

5. The above cases are instances of an express intention that the trustees should have a discretion; but the same result will follow where that intention can be implied. Thus, a testator, after a specific bequest, gave all his residuary estate, both real and personal, to trustees, upon trust, to sell so much and such part thereof as they might think necessary for paying all his mortgage and other debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and to invest the balance of the proceeds, and to stand possessed of such investments, and all other his residuary estate, upon trust for several persons successively for their respective lives, Rule not applicable where impliedly negatived.

Art. 36. with remainders over. Part of the testator's estate consisted of leaseholds which were retained unsold. On this state of facts it was held, that, on the construction of the will, the trustees had a discretion as to what part of the testator's estate should be converted, and that the court could not interfere with such discretion (e).

6. So it has been held that an express direction for sale at a particular period, indicates an intention that there should be no previous sale (f); and even a power to sell all or any part of the estate in the absolute discretion of the trustees has been held to negative the prima facie duty of selling wasting, or reversionary property forthwith (g). And a similar view has been taken of a direction to divide property after the death of the late tenant (h). So, in some cases, it has been decided that a trust to pay rents to the tenant for life, where the testator has only leaseholds (i), or a direction that the trustees should give a power of attorney to the life tenant to receive the income (k), is a sufficient indication of a contrary intention to take the case out of the general rule.

7. A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees in trust to convert into money such parts thereof as should not consist of money, or be invested in any of the public funds or government securities, and to pay the interest, dividends, and annual proceeds of such residue to his children in equal shares for their lives, and after their deaths upon other trusts. On the construction of these words it was held, that long annuities, of which the testator died possessed, fell within the exception of public funds or government securities, and ought not to be converted (l). hand, in Tickner v. Old (m), where the direction was to convert the residue and invest in government or real securities, with power to continue invested any government stocks or real securities of which the testator might die possessed, it was held that government securities meant only such as were of a permanent character, and that long annuities ought to be converted. It will be perceived that it is not easy to distinguish these two cases, which convey a warning to the practitioner how extremely dangerous it is to advise trustees to act upon implied intentions, either one way or the other, without taking the opinion of the court on originating summons.

Art. 36.

8. Although the mere absence of a direction to convert wasting property has never been construed to mean that it should be enjoyed in specie, yet, where such property is given specifically in the strict sense of the term, i.e., where it is expressly referred to, the rule has no application. For in such cases, in the absence of express direction, the presumption is, that the testator, by naming the specific property, intended that it should be enjoyed in the shape in which he left it. If, therefore, a testator bequeaths specific leaseholds in trust for persons successively, it will not be the duty of the trustees to sell them and invest the proceeds on permanent investments; but they must pay the entire rents to the first taker, notwithstanding that, by reason of the terminable nature of the property, the ultimate remainderman may be disappointed (n). This distinction between specific trust bequests and residuary trust bequests is observed even where the specific bequest and the residuary bequest were given to the same person for life (o).

ART. 37.—Duty of Trustee as between Tenant for Life and Remainderman in Relation to Property pending conversion which ought to be converted, where conversion is delayed.

Where property ought to be converted, (either by express direction or under Article 36), and the proceeds invested, the tenant for life is entitled, pending such conversion, to receive either the whole or some part of the income of income-bearing property, and to be credited with income in respect of reversionary property, in accordance with the following rules, viz. :—

- (1) He is entitled to the whole income of income-bearing property if the settlement so directs or implies (p).
- (2) Where the property is of a wasting nature (and, semble, even where, being personal estate, it is not), if there is no express power to postpone conversion, but the property cannot be sold, he is only entitled to such interest as would be produced if the property were actually sold, and the proceeds invested in trust securities. If, however, there is an express power to postpone conversion until a suitable opportunity occurs, he is entitled to interest after the rate of 3 per cent. per annum (q).
- (3) Where the property is of a reversionary nature, he is entitled, when it falls in, to a proportionate part of the capital, representing 3 (r) (formerly 4) per cent. compound interest (with yearly rests) on the true actuarial value of the property at the testator's death, calculated on the assumption that the actual date when the property fell into possession could have been then predicted with certainty (s).

(p) See Re Sheldon, Nixon v. Sheldon, 39 Ch. D. 50; Re Thomas, Wood v. Thomas, [1891] 3 Ch. 482. Where the property is of a non-wasting nature, the court will accept very slight evidence of implied intention.

- (4) Where the trustees are mortgagees in possession of property which is believed to be an insufficient security, then, pending realization, the income, less 3 per cent., is to be treated as capital, and the 3 per cent. as income. But upon complete realization of an insufficient security, the money realized, plus the income received by the tenant for life, must be divided between tenant for life and remaindermen in the proportion of the sums which ought to have been received for income and capital respectively if no default had been made; the tenant for life giving credit for what he has actually received (t).

This article is a further corollary of Art. 35, and its main principle forms the second part of the rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, viz., that prima facie, pending a conversion which ought to be made, the tenant for life is entitled to the income which would be produced by the proceeds of the conversion, if it were made, and nothing

Art. 37. more. The rule, like so many equitable rules, is founded on the maxim that equity regards that as done which ought to be done, and consequently has no application where, on the true construction of the settlement, the wasting or reversionary property is not to be converted; nor does it apply where the trustees have a discretion in the matter, and it appears to have been intended that, until conversion, the income should be enjoyed in specie. Where, on the other hand, there is merely a power to postpone conversion for the purpose of selling the property to the best advantage, and no intention is indicated that the power is inserted for the benefit of the tenant for life as against the remainderman, the rule applies. However, unless the settlement is very explicit, trustees should always be advised to take the opinion of the court before paying the actual income to a tenant for life.

Settlement directing that income is to be enjoyed in specie.

1. Where a testator devised his brickfield (which was, of course, property of a wasting nature) to trustees upon trust to sell when, in their discretion, it might seem advisable, and directed that the rents and profits should, until sale, be considered as part of his personal estate, and be applicable and applied in the same manner as the dividends or interest to arise from the investments of the sale moneys, it was held that the tenant for life was entitled to the whole of the royalties paid by tenants of the brickfield, although the trustees did not sell the property for ten years (u). If, however, the italicized words had not been inserted in the will, it seems plain that the power to postpone conversion would not of itself have authorised the payment of the whole of the royalties to the tenant for life. For, in that case, the inference would have been, that the power to postpone conversion was for the purpose of efficiently selling the estate, and not for the benefit of the tenant for life (x). The question, in short, is one of construction in all these cases, viz., whether the testator intended that the power to post-

2. A testator empowered his trustees, at their discretion, to continue all or any part of his personal estate in the state of investment in or upon which the same should be at his death, or to convert it, and invest the proceeds in the names of the trustees in certain specified securities. Part of the personal estate consisted of securities not specifically authorised, which were retained:—Held, that the tenants for life were entitled to receive in specie the income of those securities which were retained (y). It will be perceived that the testator authorised the continuance of securities, and not merely the postponement of their conversion, otherwise it is conceived that the decision might have been different.

Settlement implying that income is to be enjoyed in specie.

3. Another good example of an implied intention that income should, pending conversion, be enjoyed in specie, is afforded by the case of Re Thomas, Wood v. Thomas (z). There a testator gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for conversion and investment of the proceeds in specified securities, with power to the trustees in their absolute discretion to retain any securities or property belonging to him at his death unconverted, for such period as they should think fit. He then declared that they should stand possessed of “the stocks, funds, shares, and securities for the time being constituting or representing the residuary personal estate and effects thereinbefore bequeathed and of the income thereof,” upon trust to pay the income to certain persons for life with remainders over. The estate comprised certain American bonds, which were not included among the securities authorised by the will as investments, but were retained by the trustees in exercise of the discretion given to them:—Held, that, on the true construction of the will, the tenants for life were entitled to the whole income of the bonds in specie. In giving judgment, Mr.

Art. 37. Justice KEKEWICH said: "I am not prepared to hold, that, where there is a direction for conversion of personal estate, followed by a power of retention of existing securities in the absolute discretion of the trustees, and then there are trusts for tenants for life, and afterwards for remaindermen, the power of retention necessarily gives the tenants for life the enjoyment in specie of the securities retained by the trustees in the exercise of their discretion. But I have no doubt that one looks out with an expectant eye for a direction that the tenant for life shall receive the income when there is an express direction to the trustees to retain securities, or any indication of the testator's intention that they shall retain them indefinitely for so long as they may think fit."

4. Realty was settled upon trust to sell and invest the proceeds, and to pay the dividends to B. for life, with certain limitations over after his death. There was no direction as to payment of the intermediate rents pending sale. The land was sold without undue delay, but, pending the sale, the rents produced more than 4 per cent. per annum on the amount realised on the sale. On these facts it was held by KEKEWICH, J., that, notwithstanding the absence of any power to postpone the sale, or any direction as to the interim rents, the whole rents belonged to B., the tenant for life (a). His lordship carefully rested his judgment upon implied intention, and not upon any rule of law differentiating real estate which ought to be converted, from personal estate subject to a like trust. It is, however, difficult to understand how any such implied intention was found in this case, apart from the obvious convenience of the decision; and if convenience is to be the test of intention, it would seem to follow that such intention should be implied in every case where land is directed to be sold, unless the contrary is expressed. Indeed, the learned judge seems to have come to this conclusion in the subsequent case of Re Searle, Searle v. Baker (b), where he laid the rule down broadly that the tenant for life is always entitled to the intermediate rents where the sale is postponed (either under a power, or otherwise), without impropriety.

5. In the leading case of Brown v. Gellatly (c), the testator, who was a shipowner, directed his trustees to convert his personal estate into money, when and in such manner as they should see fit, and gave them power to sail his ships until they could be disposed of satisfactorily. The proceeds of his personal estate were then settled upon tenants for life with remainders over. The will contained a wide power of investment in specified securities. On his death the testator possessed (1) numerous ships; (2) securities falling within those authorised by the will; and (3) shares and investments not so authorised. The ships could not be immediately sold, nor could the unauthorised securities. Both, pending sale, produced a high rate of income; and the question arose, whether the tenants for life were entitled to the whole of that income, or only to some, and if so, what, proportion thereof? In giving judgment, Lord CAIRNS said: "We find no indication whatever of an intention that the ships were to remain unconverted for any specific time. The testator, who had been engaged in the shipping business, knew perfectly well, and shows that he knew, that some time would necessarily be taken in converting the ships; and therefore he very wisely provided that, until they were sold, the executors should have a power (which otherwise they would not have possessed), viz., the power to sail the ships for the purpose of making profit. But, in giving that power, he does not give it as a power to be exercised for the benefit of the tenant for life as against the parties in remainder, or for the benefit of the parties in remainder as against the interest of the tenant for life, but says that it is to be exercised for the benefit of the estate, meaning, as I apprehend, for the benefit of the estate generally, without disarranging the equities between the successive takers. In that state of things, it seems to me that the case falls exactly within the third division pointed out by Sir JAMES PARKER, in the case of Meyer v. Simonsen (d), and that a value must be set upon the ships as at the death of the testator, and the tenant for life must have 4 per cent. on such value, and the residue of Art. 37. the profits must of course be invested and become part of the estate. Then, secondly, as to the authorised securities, the tenant for life is, in my opinion, entitled to the specific income of the securities, just as if they had been 3 per cent. consols. I understand the words of the will as amounting to the constitution by the testator of a larger class of authorised securities than this court itself would have approved of, and the court has merely to follow his directions, and treat the income accordingly, as being the income of authorised securities. Then comes the third question in the case, the securities not ranging themselves under any of those mentioned in the last clause of the will. As they do not come within the class of authorised securities, it was the duty of the trustees to convert them at the earliest moment at which they properly could be converted. I do not mean to say that the trustees were by any means open to censure for not having converted them within the year after testator's death, but I think that the rights of the parties must be regulated as if they had been so converted. I think the proper order to make, is that which was made in Dimes v. Scott (e), followed by V.-C. WIGRAM in the case of Taylor v. Clark (f), namely, to treat the tenant for life as entitled, during the year after the testator's death, to the dividends upon so much 3 per cent. stock as would have been produced by the conversion and investment of the property at the end of the year." It will be perceived that his lordship speaks of 3 per cent. stock as the proper measure of the interest to be paid to the tenant for life in respect of the unauthorised securities pending sale. Whether, however, this holds good now that consols have been converted to 2½ per cent., and a larger range of securities authorised for the investment of trust funds, appears somewhat questionable. It is, however, submitted that 3 per cent. would still be the standard having regard to recent analogous cases (g).

Tenant for life entitled to part of corpus of non-income-bearing property when realised.

6. In the above cases, the income actually received by the trustees exceeded that which they were authorised to pay to the tenant for life; but the same principle applies in favour of the tenant for life, where the property is not presently saleable or realisable except at an unreasonable loss, and, pending realisation, produces no income. For instance, where part of the estate consists of a policy of assurance on another's life, which does not fall in for some years after the testator's death, or a reversion (h), unless the settlor contemplates that it shall not be sold (i), it would be unfair to the tenant for life that he should lose all the intervening income. In such cases, when it does fall in, the money must be apportioned, as between capital and income, by ascertaining the sum which, put out at 3 per cent. (j) per annum on the day of the testator's death, and accumulated at compound interest with yearly rests, and deducting income tax, would, with the accumulations, have produced the amount actually received. The sum so ascertained must be treated as capital, and retained by the trustees; but the residue is income, and must be paid to the tenant for life (k). The same principle applies where a debt due to the estate is recovered by the trustees without interest (l).

Art. 37.

7. Where part of a testator's residuary estate consisted of a colliery of which he was mortgagee in possession, the question arose as to how accumulations of the income, derived from working the colliery since the testator's death, were to be apportioned between tenant for life and remaindermen. It was held that the proper principle was, that so much as would, if invested at the testator's death at 4 per cent. with yearly rests, have amounted to the sum in the hands of the trustees, should be treated as capital, and the rest as income (m). In other words, the income received from the colliery, less 4 per cent., was considered as received on capital account, the 4 per cent. being paid to the tenant for life without prejudice to his rights to further allowances on account of interest in the event of the colliery being realised. Nowadays 3 per cent. would be substituted for four.

Corpus realised by insufficient security where interest in arrear.

8. Where a trust security turns out to be insufficient upon realisation, and interest is in arrear, the security is treated as if it had been a security for the amount realised, plus the interest which has actually been received by the tenant for life. The sum thus ascertained is then divided between tenant for life and remainderman, in the proportion which the interest (at the stipulated rate) which the tenant for life ought to have received, bears to the capital sum which was secured by the mortgage, the tenant for life giving credit for all income actually received by him (n). This principle even applies where the settlor has directed that the actual income of his estate pending conversion shall be treated as income, but that no property not actually producing income shall be treated as producing any—surely a very strong decision (o).

Rents directed to be accumulated beyond statutory period, treated as corpus.

9. Where rents were directed to be accumulated beyond the statutory period, it was held that after twenty-one years from testator's death they fell into his residuary estate during the remainder of the period for which they were directed to be accumulated; but that as between tenant for life and remaindermen (of the residue) they must be treated as corpus and not as income (p).

- (3) Where repairs to freeholds or copyholds are necessary (u), or fines become payable for the renewal of leases (x), or for putting in repair leasehold property which was out of repair at the date of the creation of the trust (y), application should be made by the trustees to the court, which will give directions for the raising of money to pay for them in such a way as to distribute the burden equitably between income and corpus.
- (4) All costs incident to the administration and protection of the trust property, including legal proceedings, are borne by corpus (z) unless they relate exclusively to the tenant for life (a).

Art. 38. of income (b). And this rule prevails even where a debt is secured by, or is payable as, an annuity. In such a case the annuity must be valued, and the tenant for life will then contribute an amount equal to interest on the valuation at 4 per cent. (c). Arrears of interest on incumbrances accrued in the lifetime of the settlor, are a charge on corpus, the tenant for life merely paying interest on them (d).

2. The strong inclination of the court to saddle capital charges on corpus, is well exemplified by the modern case of Norton v. Johnstone (e). There, a testator had directed the income of certain estates to be accumulated until the amount of the accumulations should be sufficient to pay off existing mortgages, and that, subject thereto, the property should be held to the use of the plaintiff for life, with remainders over. Before the accumulations were sufficient to discharge the mortgages, the mortgagees sold a part of the property, and, with the moneys so produced, and part of the moneys already accumulated, the mortgages were paid off. The tenant for life then claimed to be let into possession, and also to have the balance of the accumulations paid to him. On the other hand, the remainderman urged that inasmuch as the mortgage debt had been paid off by means of a sale of the corpus, which was not what was contemplated by the testator, the accumulation of rents ought to continue, until such a sum was obtained as would be equal to the amount raised by the sale, and that the sum thus obtained ought to be employed in recouping the inheritance, the tenant for life receiving only the interest of it. Mr. Justice PEARSON, however, decided in favour of the tenant for life, on the ground that the mortgage debts had been paid in a way different from that which the testator intended, that he had not provided for that event, and that consequently the ordinary rule as to the incidence of capital charges must govern the case.

3. Where, however, on the expiration of a lease granted by the settlor, the tenant for life is obliged to pay compensation for improvements to the outgoing lessee under a covenant in the lease, he has no claim to saddle the compensation on corpus. For as JESSEL, M.R., said: "If he lives long enough he will let the land again, and get the outlay from the incoming tenant, and so if he recovered it now he would be repaid twice over" (f). However, this does not apply to compensation payable under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 61), as the incidence of such compensation is expressly provided for by s. 29 of that Act. Art. 38.

4. Calls on shares which form part of a trust estate, are outgoing attributable to capital and not to income, and are accordingly payable out of corpus (g). Calls on shares.

1. All charges of an annual character, except annual charges to secure capital sums, are payable out of income; for otherwise the corpus would inevitably decrease year by year, and would ultimately be swallowed up. Thus, the income must bear rates and taxes (h), the rent payable for, and the expenses incident to the observance and performance of the covenants and conditions in relation to leasehold hereditaments (i). But a tenant for life is not liable to have his income taken for breaches of covenant not occurring in his time (k). It would seem that even the cost of complying with a sanitary notice under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), or a dangerous structure notice under the London Building Act, 1894 (l), are payable by the tenant for life; but not, it would seem, the cost of a thorough reconstruction of the sewers of a house (m). the United States of America it has been held that an extraordinary tax such as a tax for betterment, or for making up a highway, is chargeable to corpus (n). Of course annuities charged on income (o), the commission or poundage payable to a receiver, and the expenses incident to the preparation and passing of his accounts must be borne by income (p). So where a life policy forms part of the settled property, the premiums are payable in the first instance out of income and not capital (q), but are, it would seem, repayable to the tenant for life when the policy falls in with interest at 4 per cent. (r). On the same ground, where a rent-charge is redeemed by the tenant for life, he is only entitled to be recouped, out of corpus, the amount paid, less the value of the redemption to his life estate (s). Where trustees are directed to insure the trust property against loss or damage by fire, the premiums must be borne by income. Up to the end of 1888, it was questionable whether trustees could lawfully expend trust moneys in insuring against loss or damage by fire. However, by s. 18 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), trustees are authorised to make such insurances to any amount not exceeding three-fourths of the value of the building or property insured, and to pay the premiums out of income; but the section does not apply to simple trusts.

business.

2. Where a business is vested in trustees in trust for successive tenants for life and remaindermen, the net losses on one year's trading must, under ordinary circumstances, be made good out of the profits of subsequent years, and not out of capital (t). For the outgoings of a business are part of the regular current expenses, and there can be no profits until all losses are paid, whether such losses are incurred in a year in which gross profits exceed the losses, or were incurred in prior years. The same rule, however, does not seem to apply where a business is not carried on under a direction in the settlement, but is merely carried on temporarily until it can be sold profitably. In such cases, the annual loss or profit (if any) ought to be apportioned between capital and income as follows: Calculate the sum which, put out at interest at 4 (query 3) per cent. per annum on the day when the business ought to have been sold, (if it could have been) and accumulated at compound interest at the like rate, with yearly rests, would, together with such interest and accumulations, after deducting income tax, be equivalent at the end of each year to the amount of the loss or profit sustained or made during that year. The sum so ascertained will be charged against, or credited to, capital, and the rest of the loss will be charged against, or the rest of the profit will be credited to, income (u).

3. However, where, on the facts, it appears to have been the settlor's intention that losses on a trust business should be borne by capital, effect will be given to that intention. For instance, where partners carry on a business, each partner having the right to bequeath his share, and it has been the partnership custom to write off the losses of unprosperous years from each partner's share of capital, that custom will be continued, even as between a tenant for life and remainderman, in whose favour one of the partners has bequeathed his share (x). Secus where intention can be implied that losses shall be borne by capital.

Art. 38. of it, on corpus (z), the result is not infrequently extremely embarrassing and prejudicial to all parties (a). Indeed, few statutes would be more useful than a well considered one dealing with this subject. Where, however, the legal estate in fee is in the trustees (at all events where they have a power of, or trust for sale (b)), it would seem that the court has jurisdiction to make an order empowering them to raise money for making repairs necessary for the preservation of the property (c), or even for erecting additional buildings necessary for rendering the property tenantable or saleable (d), and of apportioning the cost equitably between income and corpus (e). Indeed, it has been held that trustees may, without any order, do such repairs to leasehold property as are necessary to prevent a forfeiture of the lease (f), and repay themselves out of the income (f), but without prejudice to the rights of tenant for life and remaindermen inter se (g). But this was expressly on the ground that trustees may expend money by way of salvage, and have a lien both on income and corpus for expenses properly incurred by them, as will be seen later on (h). But although the court has jurisdiction to authorise a charge on the entire estate which is the subject of the settlement for the purpose of raising money for repairs where the legal estate is in trustees, it does not follow that the whole or even any part of the cost of such repairs will be saddled on the corpus.

(a) The same difficulty occurs in the United States of America, where it is settled that, in the absence of express power, an equitable life tenant cannot be interfered with by the trustee for the purpose of making repairs; and that, on the other hand, if the life tenant makes repairs, he must pay the cost himself (Thurston v. Dickerson, 2 Rich. Eq. 317; Cogswell v. Cogswell, 2 Edw. Ch. 231).

The cases are very obscure as to this, but the following propositions are submitted, viz. : Art. 33.

- (1) Where the property was in disrepair when the tenant for life came into possession, then whatever its tenure may be, the court will not throw the cost exclusively on him, but will sanction a mortgage, and will equitably apportion the ultimate cost between corpus and income (i). There is, however, no reported case showing how this equitable apportionment will be carried out, but in one case in which the present writer appeared before ROMER, J., in Chambers, that learned judge approved a scheme under which the trustees were to pay for a new roof in a tropical climate (which was estimated to last for twenty years only) by a sinking fund extending over that period. And where trustees under a power invested money in the purchase of real estate out of repair, the cost of putting it in repair was thrown exclusively on capital (k).
- (2) Where the property was not in disrepair when the tenant for life came into possession, and is of leasehold tenure, the better opinion seems to be that the question is governed by the maxim qui sensit commodum debet sentire et onus, and that the equitable tenant for life, as he enjoys the income of the property, must keep it in repair (l).
- (3) But where it is freehold, it would seem that unless the settlement expressly or impliedly authorises the trustees to pay for current repairs out of the rents, the trustees must apply to the court for directions, in which case the court will equitably apportion the repairs between capital and income (k). estates, the reader is referred to the classification made by Mr. Kenyon Parker, and set forth in 21 Ch. D., at p. 787, and to the case of Re Hawker, Duff v. Hawker (m).

2. By s. 19 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), a trustee of renewable leases may, if he thinks fit, and must if required by any beneficiary so to do, use his best endeavours to obtain a renewal; and for that purpose is empowered to surrender existing leases. But where the beneficiary in possession is entitled, under the settlement, without any obligation to renew or to contribute to the renewal, then the Act does not apply unless he gives his consent. The 2nd sub-section provides that—

“If money is required to pay for the renewal, the trustee effecting the renewal may pay the same out of any money then in his hands in trust for the persons beneficially interested in the lands to be comprised in the renewed lease, and if he has not in his hands sufficient money for the purpose, he may raise the money required by mortgage of the hereditaments to be comprised in the renewed lease, or of any other hereditaments for the time being subject to the uses or trusts to which those hereditaments are subject, and no person advancing money upon a mortgage purporting to be under this power shall be bound to see that the money is wanted, or that no more is raised than is wanted for the purpose.”

This section applies to trusts created before, as well as after the Act, but is of course subject to the directions of the settlement. It has been recently held by KEKEWICH, J., that its object was merely to assist trustees in renewing leases, and in no way affects the ultimate incidence of the expense as between tenant for life and remaindermen (n).

land.

3. Where the question arises as to the incidence of the cost, not of mere repairs, but of putting property into a better condition than it was originally in, it would seem that no part of the cost falls on income. Thus, the expense of fencing waste lands granted to a trustee for the benefit of the estate, must be paid out of corpus exclusively (o).

1. Legal expenses incident to the administration of a trust almost exclusively fall on capital, unless the settlor has expressly provided for them; for they are for the benefit of all persons interested. Thus, the costs of the appointment of new trustees (p), the costs incident to the investment or change of investment of trust funds (q), the costs of obtaining legal advice (r), and of taking the direction of the court (s), the costs of an administration action (t), the costs of paying money into court under the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53) (u), the costs of bringing or defending actions against third parties for the protection of the estate (x), and the like, are all payable out of corpus. On the other hand, where money is paid into court under the Trustee Act, 1893, the costs of all necessary parties to a petition for obtaining an order for the payment of the income to the tenant for life have been held to be payable out of income (y). But where a testator gave a fund to trustees upon trust for investment in land, which was to be settled to the use of several persons successively for their lives, and the fund was paid into court in an administration suit, it was held by MALINS, V.-C., that the costs of a petition by a tenant for life for payment of the dividends to him, were payable out of corpus (z). ART. 39.—Duty of Trustee to exercise Reasonable Care.

Trustees are not insurers (a), and except where courts of equity have imposed distinct and stringent duties upon them (which duties are mentioned in the succeeding articles of this chapter), they are only bound to use such due diligence and care in the management of the estate, as men of ordinary prudence and vigilance would use in the management of their own affairs (b). The mere fact that a trustee has acted under the advice of his counsel or solicitor will not necessarily excuse him (c) where a breach of trust has been committed; nor, on the other hand, does the fact that a trustee is remunerated add to his liability (d).

would take in managing similar affairs of his own, it is a rule which is not easy of application. The difficulty arises from the fact, pointed out by Lord BLACKBURN in the leading case of Speight v. Gaunt (e), that “Judges and lawyers, who see brought before them the cases in which losses have been incurred, and do not see the infinitely more numerous cases in which expense and trouble and inconvenience are avoided, are apt to think men of business rash.” Moreover, LINDLEY, L.J., has recently laid it down (at all events in regard to making investments) that in applying the rule, “care must be taken not to lose sight of the fact that the business of the trustee and the business which the ordinary prudent man is supposed to be conducting for himself is the business of investing money for the benefit of persons who are to enjoy it at some future time, and not for the sole benefit of the person entitled to the present income. The duty of a trustee is not to take such care only as a prudent man would take if he had only himself to consider; the duty rather is to take such care as an ordinary prudent man would take if he were minded to make an investment for the benefit of other people for whom he felt morally bound to provide. That is the kind of business the ordinary prudent man is supposed to be engaged in, and unless this is borne in mind, the standard of a trustee’s duty will be fixed too low, lower than it has ever yet been fixed, and lower certainly than the House of Lords, or this court, endeavoured to fix it in Speight v. Gaunt” (f).

The principal cases in which the care demanded of a trustee has been considered, are those arising out of the investment of trust funds; but as the duties of a trustee in regard to investment are of extreme importance, they will be treated of separately in the next article. For present purposes, the illustrations to the article now under consideration will be restricted to cases which do not arise out of the careless investment of trust moneys.

Art. 39. only press for payment, but, if they are not paid within a reasonable time, should enforce payment by means of legal proceedings (h). It has been said that the only excuse for not taking action to enforce payment of such debts is a well founded belief, on the trustee's part, that such action would be fruitless, that the burden of proving the grounds of such belief is on the trustee, and that no consideration of delicacy and no regard for the feelings of relatives or friends will exonerate him from this disagreeable duty (h). Whether, however, this broad dictum is consistent with s. 21 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53) (which is merely a re-enactment of s. 37 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41)), is respectfully questioned. The late Sir GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., at all events thought that the probable effect of that enactment was to make the question entirely one of good faith and not one of well founded belief (i). And the provisions of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), by which the court is now empowered to relieve trustees against breaches of trust where they have acted honestly and reasonably, would seem to give statutory effect to this view (j).

3. On the other hand, it has been held that a trustee is not bound to commence legal proceedings when, in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, he considers it inexpedient to do so. For instance, in a case where one beneficiary would have been ruined by the immediate realization of a debt due from him to the trust estate, and the other beneficiaries (his children) would have been seriously prejudiced, the House of Lords held, that the trustee exercised a reasonable discretion in refraining from suing the debtor and in allowing him time, and that the trustee was consequently discharged from liability for any consequent losses (k). However, the practitioner must be warned, that he would incur the most serious responsibility if he were to advise a trustee to act in a similar manner. For the onus would distinctly lie on the trustee, to prove that the facts were as he believed them ; and the difficulty of proving this (perhaps many years afterwards), is obvious. In all such cases, therefore, where a trustee is doubtful whether he should sue a debtor or not, the proper course is to issue an originating summons asking the direction of the court. By taking this course, the trustee is relieved from a heavy responsibility at a trifling cost to the trust estate (l).

4. So in Re Medland, Eland v. Medland (m), NORTH, J., held that when a security, proper at the date of investment, subsequently becomes deteriorated, so as to leave no safe margin, it is not necessarily the duty of the trustees to call the money in ; but they have a discretion, which they must exercise as practical men, with a due regard to all the circumstances, including the position and solvency of the mortgagor. However, this particular matter is now provided for by s. 4 of the Trustee Act, 1893, Amendment Act, 1894 (57 Vict. c. 10), by which it is enacted that—

“ A trustee shall not be liable for breach of trust by reason only of his continuing to hold an investment which has ceased to be an investment authorised by the instrument of trust or by the general law.”

Whether this enactment is retrospective seems doubtful (n).

5. Trustees might always release or compound debts due to the trust estate, where they bonâ fide and reasonably believed that that course was for the benefit of their beneficiaries (o). And now by s. 21 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53) (which is merely a re-enactment of s. 37 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41)), two or more trustees acting together, or a sole acting trustee, where a sole trustee is, by the settlement, authorised to execute the trusts and powers Compounding debts.

thereof, may (1) accept any composition; (2) accept any security, real or personal, for any debt or for any property, real or personal, claimed; (3) allow time for payment of any debt; (4) compromise, compound, abandon, submit to arbitration, or otherwise settle, any account, claim, or thing whatever relating to the trust; and (5) enter into and execute all such agreements, releases, etc., as they or he may deem expedient, without being responsible for any loss occasioned by any act or thing so done by him or them in good faith. The exact effect of this enactment has so far not been judicially decided; but, as above stated, the late Sir GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., intimated that "it might have a revolutionary effect on this branch of the law. It looks as if the only question left would be whether the [trustees] have acted in good faith or not" (p). It is somewhat curious that this statutory authority was not referred to, either by counsel or the court, in the case of Re Brogden, Billing v. Brogden, supra, but it is apprehended that it was rightly assumed, that it could not apply to that case. For two of the trustees were the debtors, and must have known their own pecuniary position, and therefore could not have acted in good faith in the matter; and, as to the third trustee, having regard to the fact of his co-trustees being the debtors, he was practically a sole trustee in the matter, and yet was not a sole trustee who was by the settlement authorised to execute the trusts and powers thereof. Anyhow, until s. 21 of the Trustee Act, 1893, is judicially interpreted, trustees would, in most cases, be ill-advised to act upon it without judicial sanction in view of the decision in Re Brogden, Billing v. Brogden.

Allowing
in arrear.

6. Where trustees allowed rents to get in arrear which they might have recovered by proper diligence, it was held that they were liable to make good the arrears, though without interest, the judge saying: "If there be crassa negligentia and a loss sustained by the estate, it falls upon the trustee" (q).

7. Where a trustee, indebted to the trust, becomes bankrupt, it is his duty to prove the debt; and if he neglect to do so he will be liable for the loss, notwithstanding that he may have obtained his certificate. For, as was observed by Sir J. ROMILLY, M.R.: "Suppose a person owing money to a trust estate becomes bankrupt, and the trustee is a distinct and separate person knowing of the bankruptcy, he is bound to prove the debt; if he does not he commits a breach of trust, and would be held liable for all that he might have received under the commission if he had proved the debt as he ought to have done. Is the case altered because the trustee is himself the debtor? I think not; the original debt, no doubt, is barred, but the amount of the dividends which the trustee might have received under the commission is a liability subsequently attaching to the trustee in that character, and is not affected by the bankruptcy or the certificate" (r).

Art. 39.

Bankrupt trustee indebted to trust should prove.

8. So, again, where a settlor has, for valuable consideration, covenanted to settle property, a trustee who neglects to enforce the covenant is liable for any loss occasioned thereby (s). In order to obviate this very unpleasant and thankless duty, it is usual to insert a proviso in such settlements excusing the trustees from liability for not enforcing such covenants.

Enforcing covenant against settlor.

9. Or, again, if a trustee neglect to register the trust instrument (where it requires to be registered), and the settlor is thereby enabled to effect a mortgage on the property, the trustee will be liable (t).

advantage. They should, therefore (in general), abstain from joining with the owners of contiguous property in a sale of the whole together, unless, indeed, such a course would be clearly beneficial to their beneficiaries. For by doing so, they expose the trust property to deterioration on account of the flaws, or possible flaws, in the title to the other property. But "suppose there were a house belonging to trustees, and a garden and forecourt belonging to somebody else, it must be obvious that those two properties would fetch more if sold together than if sold separately; you might have a divided portion of a house belonging to trustees, and another divided portion belonging to somebody else. It would be equally obvious if these two portions were sold together, that a more beneficial result would thereby take place. . . . But in those cases where it is not manifest on a mere inspection of the properties that it is more beneficial to sell them together, then you ought to have reasonable evidence that it is a prudent and right thing to do; and that evidence, as we know by experience, is obtained from surveyors and other persons who are competent judges" (u).

11. "Where trustees for sale are joint owners with a third party, or are reversioners, it is obvious that they may in general join in a sale; for everybody knows that as a general rule (of course there are exceptions to every rule) the entirety of a freehold estate fetches more than the sum total of the undivided parts or the separate value of the particular estate and reversion" (x). And indeed this view has now received the express sanction of the legislature (y).

sale.

12. Again, trustees for sale ought not to do any act which will depreciate the property, and so they ought not unnecessarily to limit the title. For no reasonable man would unnecessarily depreciate his own property by such means. The subject of depreciatory conditions was formerly of great importance, because a purchaser might have objected to complete, on the ground that such conditions constituted a breach of trust for which he himself, taking with notice, might be held responsible (z). However, since 1888, the state of the law with regard to such conditions has been altered, and, now, no sale made by a trustee can be impeached at all, unless the beneficiaries prove that the consideration was thereby rendered inadequate; and, after the execution of the conveyance, no such sale can be impeached as against the purchaser, unless the beneficiaries also prove that such purchaser was acting in collusion with the trustee at the time when the contract for sale was made. Moreover, no purchaser can any longer make any requisition or objection on any such ground; and a trustee who is either a vendor or purchaser is not bound to exclude the application of s. 2 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78) (a). The meaning of this enactment is not, however, so clear as could be desired. Is it intended exclusively to protect purchasers, and to free them from the necessity of taking the objection, or is it also intended to protect the trustee in the event of the beneficiaries suing the trustee for breach of trust? The words "no sale shall be impeached," are certainly more apt for expressing the first of such purposes than the second. Yet it is conceived that the trustee would receive the benefit of the doubt if the case should ever arise, and that henceforth the onus of proving loss in such transactions will fall upon the beneficiaries.

Art. 39.

13. Again, if trustees for sale, or those who act under their authority, fail in reasonable diligence in inviting competition, or if they contract to sell under circumstances of great improvidence or waste, they will be personally responsible (b). It is, therefore, the duty of trustees for sale to inform themselves of the real value of the property, and for that purpose to employ, if necessary, some experienced person to value it (c). Nor must they give a future option to a person to purchase the estate (e.g., in a lease);

Art. 39. for if the estate should increase in value they will have given the increase away, whereas if it should decrease, the person to whom the option is given would not exercise it (d).

Improvident purchase.

14. The same principle holds good in the case of trustees for purchase, who ought to clearly satisfy themselves of the value of the property, and for that purpose to employ a valuer of their own, and not trust to the valuer of the vendor. For a man may bonâ fide form his opinion, but he looks at the case in a totally different way when he knows on whose behalf he is acting; and if the trustees rely upon the vendor's valuer, and he, however bonâ fide, values the property at more than its true value, they will be liable (e).

15. Trustees for purchase should also take reasonable care that they get a good marketable title, and that they do not, by conditions of sale, bind themselves not to require one (f); and they should never purchase without getting the legal estate (g). Moreover, they should never purchase land merely as a speculation without having money in hand to pay for it (h).

Error of judgment.

16. Even before the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, gave the court power to excuse a trustee who has acted reasonably and honestly, a trustee was not responsible for a mere error of judgment, if he had exercised a reasonable discretion, and acted with diligence and good faith. Thus, where an executor omitted to sell some foreign bonds for a year after the testator's death, although there was a direction in the will to convert with all reasonable speed, he was held irresponsible for a loss caused by the bonds falling in price; for although the conclusion he came to was unfortunate, yet, having exercised a bonâ fide discretion, the mere fact of the loss was not sufficient to charge him (i). As to what constitutes a reasonable delay, depends on the particular circumstances affecting each case. Prima facie, a trustee ought not to delay realisation beyond a year, even where he has apparently unlimited discretion (k); and if he procrastinates beyond that period, the onus will be cast upon him of proving that the delay was reasonable and proper (l).

Art. 39.

17. A trustee will not be liable if the trust property be stolen, provided he has taken reasonable care of it (m), even although the thief be his own servant, if, on the facts proved, it appeared that the trustee was justified in deputing the custody of the property to such servant (e.g., the manager of a trust business (n)); yet, by a curious anomaly, it has been held that a trustee is liable if he is induced by fraud or forgery to hand it over to the wrong person (o). It is difficult to understand how this latter rule could have come into being, except upon the false analogy of a trustee to a banker or creditor. As has been shown in this article, a trustee is in the position of a gratuitous bailee; he must take reasonable care of the trust property, and if it is lost or stolen he is discharged from responsibility, provided that he was guiltless of negligence. If, then, a careful trustee is not responsible for property stolen from his custody, upon what conceivable ground should he be held responsible for property obtained from him by false pretences or forgery, which are crimes far more subtle, and against which it is much more difficult to safeguard himself? It is, however, submitted that since the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), such a technical breach of trust can and ought to be excused by the court (p).

Art. 39.

Neglect in
securities.

18. Where a trustee of a policy of insurance neglected to endorse on it a memorandum of the trust, or to give notice to the office, and subsequently carelessly allowed it to get into the settlor's hands, who mortgaged it to a third party, the trustee was held liable (q). Where trustees hold securities payable to bearer, the proper course is to deposit them with their bankers (r), and not with their solicitor (s), nor with one only of the trustees (t), unless for purposes of sale in cases where he is a stockbroker (u).

chattels.

19. So a trustee of chattels should make and keep an inventory of them, so that if lost by the neglect or fraud of others, proper evidence of the nature and value of the chattels may be preserved (x).

Neglect to
fund.

20. A trustee ought to invest moneys in his hands subject to the trust within a reasonable time; and if he omits to do so, he will be charged interest (y); and, if the fund be lost, he will be liable to make it good (z). A fortiori will he be liable where he has left the trust fund in the sole custody of his co-trustee (a). And, on similar grounds, trustees ought to accumulate infants' property by way of compound interest (b).

to insure.

21. A trustee is not bound to insure leasehold premises against loss by fire (c); but by s. 18 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), trustees are expressly authorised to do so to an amount not exceeding three-fourths of the value of the property insured, and to pay the premiums out of the income of that property or of any other property subject to the same trusts. The section does not, however, apply to property held on simple trust for beneficiaries absolutely, and is, of course, subject to the express directions (if any) of the settlement. Art. 39.

22. Trustees are generally bound to see that trust premises do not fall into decay (d). But, as we have seen, the cost of repairs is not thrown exclusively on income (e), and trustees should apply to the Court for directions as to raising the necessary money (d). It has, however, been decided that when leasehold houses are held in trust to receive the rents and pay them to A. for life, and after his death in trust for B., the trustees, in order to avoid forfeiture, are entitled to apply the rents in keeping the houses in a proper state (f). But this is without prejudice to the ultimate incidence of the costs (g). How far bound to see to repairs.

23. Trustees being liable for gross negligence, are, Mala fides, à fortiori, liable where they combine reckless disregard of the interests of their cestuis que trusts with mala fides. Thus, where one trustee retires from the trust in order, as he thinks, to relieve himself from the responsibility of a wrongful act meditated by his co-trustee, he will be held as fully responsible as if he had been particeps criminis (h). But to make him responsible it must be proved that the very breach of trust which was in fact committed was not merely the outcome of, or rendered easy by the retirement, but was contemplated by the trustee who retired (i).

Art. 40.

ART. 40.—Duty of Trustee in relation to the Investment of Trust Funds.

(1) A trustee can only lawfully invest trust funds upon securities authorised by the settlement or by statute (k); and not upon the latter if the settlement forbids such investment (l).

(2) Even with regard to securities so authorised, a trustee is not free from liability, if, having regard to all the circumstances, and to the rules laid down in Arts. 35 and 39, it be improper or imprudent to make such investment (m). But the mere fact that stock is above par does not necessarily make it improper to purchase it (n).

(3) In particular, in investing on mortgage, he should (unless expressly authorised by the settlement) accept only a first legal mortgage (o) of freehold or copyhold property, which is not of a wasting character (p); should never join in a contributory mortgage (q); and should always obtain a report as to the value of the property made by, and act upon the advice as to its propriety as a trust investment of a person whom he reasonably believes to be an able practical surveyor or valuer, instructed and employed independently of the owner of the property; and

(5) Where there is power to invest, such power carries with it the power to vary investments from time to time (u).

(6) Where part of a testator's residuary trust estate consists of securities on which the trustees are permitted to invest, they are not bound to convert and then to procure others of the same nature, unless, having regard to all the surrounding circumstances, it would be imprudent to retain them (x).

solidated in ss. 1—6 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), as amended by s. 2 of the Colonial Stock Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 62), by the latter of which it is enacted that the securities in which a trustee may invest under the powers of the Trustee Act, 1893, shall include any colonial stock registered in the United Kingdom in accordance with the provisions of the Colonial Stock Acts, 1877 to 1900, and with respect to which there have been observed such conditions as the Treasury may by order prescribe. The restrictions in s. 2 (2) of the Trustee Act, 1893, are to apply to such colonial stocks.

1. A trustee may, unless expressly forbidden by the instrument (if any) creating the trust, invest any trust funds in his hands, whether at the time in a state of investment or not, in manner following, that is to say :

- (a.) In any of the parliamentary stocks or public funds or government securities of the United Kingdom :
- (b.) On real or heritable securities in Great Britain or Ireland (y) :
- (c.) In the stock of the Bank of England or the Bank of Ireland :
- (d.) In India three and a half per cent. stock and India three per cent. stock, or in any other capital stock which may at any time hereafter be issued by the Secretary of State in Council of India under the authority of Act of Parliament, and charged on the revenues of India :
- (e.) In any securities the interest of which is for the time being guaranteed by Parliament (z) :
- (f.) In consolidated stock created by the Metropolitan Board of Works, or by the London County Council, or in debenture stock created by the receiver for the Metropolitan Police District :
- (g.) In the debenture or rentcharge, or guaranteed or preference stock of any railway company in Great Britain or Ireland incorporated by special Act of Parliament, and having during each of the ten years last past before the date of investment paid a dividend at the rate of not less than three per centum per annum on its ordinary stock (a) :

- (h.) In the stock of any railway or canal company in Great Britain or Ireland whose undertaking is leased in perpetuity or for a term of not less than two hundred years at a fixed rental to any such railway company as is mentioned in sub-section (g), either alone or jointly with any other railway company :
- (i.) In the debenture stock of any railway company in India the interest on which is paid or guaranteed by the Secretary of State in Council of India :
- (j.) In the "B" annuities of the Eastern Bengal, the East Indian, and the Scinde Punjaub and Delhi Railways, and any like annuities which may at any time hereafter be created on the purchase of any other railway by the Secretary of State in Council of India, and charged on the revenues of India, and which may be authorised by Act of Parliament to be accepted by trustees in lieu of any stock held by them in the purchased railway ; also in deferred annuities comprised in the register of holders of annuity Class D. and annuities comprised in the register of annuitants Class C. of the East Indian Railway Company :
- (k.) In the stock of any railway company in India upon which a fixed or minimum dividend in sterling is paid or guaranteed by the Secretary of State in Council of India, or upon the capital of which the interest is so guaranteed :
- (l.) In the debenture or guaranteed or preference stock of any company in Great Britain or Ireland, established for the supply of water for profit, and incorporated by special Act of Parliament or by Royal Charter, and having during each of the ten years last past before the date of investment paid a dividend of not less than five pounds per centum on its ordinary stock :
- (m.) In nominal or inscribed stock issued, or to be issued, by the corporation of any municipal borough having, according to the returns of the last census prior to the date of investment, a population exceeding fifty thousand, or by any county council, under the authority of any Act of Parliament or provisional order :

purpose of supplying water, and having a compulsory power of levying rates over an area having, according to the returns of the last census prior to the date of investment, a population exceeding fifty thousand, provided that during each of the ten years last past before the date of investment the rates levied by such commissioners shall not have exceeded eighty per centum of the amount authorised by law to be levied :

- (o.) In any of the stocks, funds, or securities for the time being authorised for the investment of cash under the control or subject to the order of the High Court (b), and may also from time to time vary any such investment (c).

2.—(1.) A trustee may under the powers of this Act invest in any of the securities mentioned or referred to in section one of this Act, notwithstanding that the same may be redeemable, and that the price exceeds the redemption value.

(2.) Provided that a trustee may not under the powers of this Act purchase at a price exceeding its redemption value any stock mentioned or referred to in sub-sections (g), (i), (k), (l), and (m) of section one, which is liable to be redeemed within fifteen years of the date of purchase at par or at some other fixed rate, or purchase any such stock as is mentioned or referred to in the sub-sections aforesaid, which is liable to be redeemed at par or at some other

(b) These at present (see R. S. C. Ord. XXII. r. 17) are rather more restricted than the statutory investments, except as to that specified in sub-s. (g) of the Act, with regard to which all that the court requires is that the railway company has paid a dividend (not necessarily of 3 per cent.) on ordinary capital for ten years next before the date of investment. The "City Editor" of "The Times," some years since, stated that "lawyers differ" as to the effect of this, some contending that, with regard to investments open to trustees, the rule of court is governed and restricted by the Act. It is, however, conceived that this is an absurd contention. The Act enumerates a series of investments that are to be permanently permissible, and then, by way of further extension, and certainly not by way of restriction, says that also all stocks, etc. shall be permissible on which the court may for the time being authorise its funds to be invested. At present the court permits its funds to be invested on the debenture stocks of railway companies which have paid any dividend for ten years past ; and therefore it follows, that, at present, trustees may follow suit. It is difficult to understand how any lawyer could be of a contrary opinion, which would render sub-s. (o) absolutely meaningless.

(c) This applies even where the settlement contains no power to vary (Re Dick, Lopes v. Hume-Dick, [1891] 1 Ch. 423 ; aff., [1892] A. C. 112 ; and see Re Owthwaite, Owthwaite v. Taylor, [1891] 3 Ch. 494). The court will not, as a rule, interfere with the discretion of trustees as to varying investments (Lee v. Young, 2 Y. & C. C. 532).

fixed rate, at a price exceeding fifteen per centum above par or such other fixed rate (d).

Art. 40.

(3.) A trustee may retain until redemption any redeemable stock, fund, or security which may have been purchased in accordance with the powers of this Act.

3. Every power conferred by the preceding sections shall be exercised according to the discretion of the trustee, but subject to any consent required by the instrument, if any, creating the trust with respect to the investment of the trust funds.

4. The preceding sections shall apply as well to trusts created before as to trusts created after the passing of this Act, and the powers thereby conferred shall be in addition to the powers conferred by the instrument, if any, creating the trust.

5.—(1.) A trustee having power to invest in real securities, unless expressly forbidden by the instrument creating the trust, may invest and shall be deemed to have always had power to invest—

(a) on mortgage of property held for an unexpired term of not less than two hundred years, and not subject to a reservation of rent greater than a shilling a year, or to any right of redemption or to any condition for re-entry, except for non-payment of rent ; and

(b) on any charge, or upon mortgage of any charge, made under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864.

(2.) A trustee having power to invest in the mortgages or bonds of any railway company or of any other description of company may, unless the contrary is expressed in the instrument authorising the investment, invest in the debenture stock of a railway company or such other company as aforesaid.

(3.) A trustee having power to invest money in the debentures or debenture stock of any railway or other company may, unless the contrary is expressed in the instrument authorising the investment, invest in any nominal debentures or nominal debenture stock issued under the Local Loans Act, 1875.

(4.) A trustee having power to invest money in securities in the Isle of Man, or in securities of the government of a colony, may, unless the contrary is expressed in the instrument authorising the investment, invest in any securities of the Government of the Isle of Man, under the Isle of Man Loans Act, 1880.

(d) This, of course, overrides the more stringent restrictions imposed on trustees by the local Acts under which these stocks were formerly made conditional trustee investments.

Art. 40.

(5.) A trustee having a general power to invest trust moneys in or upon the security of shares, stock, mortgages, bonds, or debentures of companies incorporated by or acting under the authority of an Act of Parliament, may invest in, or upon the security of, mortgage debentures duly issued under and in accordance with the provisions of the Mortgage Debenture Act, 1865.

6. A trustee having power to invest in the purchase of land or on mortgage of land may invest in the purchase, or on mortgage of any land, notwithstanding the same is charged with a rent under the powers of the Public Money Drainage Acts, 1846 to 1856, or the Landed Property Improvement (Ireland) Act, 1847, or by an absolute order made under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864, unless the terms of the trust expressly provide that the land to be purchased or taken in mortgage shall not be subject to any such prior charge.

Investments
by Settled Land Act.

2. The foregoing securities refer to ordinary trusts (e); but where the trust fund consists of capital money arising under the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, or is money which is liable to be laid out, under the trusts of a settlement, in the purchase of land (f), the trustees must invest it, according to the direction of the tenant for life, in some of the modes specified in s. 21 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, or at the option of the tenant for life, on the securities in which money produced by the exercise of a power of sale in the settlement might be invested thereunder (g).

Although the range of trust investments has, as above stated, been greatly increased, the court still scrutinises with considerable jealousy, any direction to invest in securities not authorised by parliament; and the following examples (which of course turn on the construction of particular settlements) will show how careful a trustee

(e) The Act does not apply to trust funds of a building society (Re National Permanent Building Society, 43 Ch. D. 431); but it does to trust funds held by a corporation in trust for a charity (Manchester Royal Infirmary v. Att.-Gen., 43 Ch. D. 420).

(g) Settled Land Act, 1882, ss. 22, 33. It is apprehended that, notwithstanding the word "thereunder," trustees, for purposes of the Settled Land Act, would now be authorised to invest in any of the securities permitted by the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53).

Art. 40.

ought to be, before assuming that the language of his settlement really authorises investments which it appears at first sight, and to the average uncritical reader, to do. Thus, where a settlor empowers his trustees to place out the trust fund at interest "at their discretion," it seems to be the better opinion, that the discretion of the trustees is limited to a discretion as to which of the several forms of security authorised by law they shall invest in, and does not give them power to invest in securities not so authorised; such, for instance, as ordinary railway stock (h). And indeed the word "invest" seems to point to a loan and not to an employment in a trading speculation, as also does a direction to place out at interest (i) or on security (k).

4. So, again, where trustees are authorised to retain a settlor's shares in a particular company, they must not accept new shares on reconstruction of the company (l), nor, a fortiori, ought they to increase their holding in the company. They may, however, accept an allotment of bonus shares, but must promptly sell them (m).

Where authorised to retain shares, must not increase their holding.

5. On similar grounds, where trustees are authorised to invest money by placing the same in the hands of a specified firm at interest, it is a breach of trust to continue the loan after a change has taken place in the constitution of the firm (n).

Where authorised to lend to a firm.

not independent nations. And in recent cases it was held that a power to invest in the securities of any "public company" extended to the securities of companies incorporated under the Companies Acts, and was not restricted to companies incorporated by statute or royal charter (p); and that a company incorporated by charter under the provisions of a general Act of Parliament was a "company incorporated by statute" (q). But an ordinary joint stock company is not "created by statute" (r), nor are unincorporated Dock Commissioners a "public company or body corporate" (s).

7. It need scarcely be pointed out that, in the absence of clear, express, and imperative direction, trustees (even where they have a discretion) cannot, without breach of trust, lend trust fund on the security of a personal promise, or of personal property, however apparently trustworthy (t); and, as Lord KENYON said in Holmes v. Dring, this "ought to be rung into the ears of every one who acts in the character of trustee" (u). It is true that in one case, BACON, V.-C., held, that where trustees were authorised to invest on real or personal security, they might permit money to remain merely on the security of a personal promise or bond (x); but it is humbly submitted, that, however this might be if the expression "personal security" stood alone, its juxtaposition in this case with the alternative "real security" ought to have restricted its meaning to "the security of personal property," and that to enlarge it so as to cover the security of a personal promise was scarcely justified (y). However, it has been held by KEKEWICH, J., that even where the direction is not imperative, trustees may lend on personal security, if satisfied that there is a reasonable prospect of repayment, and may lend to the tenant for life, although his consent to the loan is required (z). Of course it is quite clear that where trustees, authorised to invest on personal security, do so merely for the purpose of accommodating the borrower, and not bonâ fide for the benefit of their beneficiaries, they will be liable for any loss, notwithstanding the authorisation (a); and â fortiori is that so where they lend in consideration of a bribe (b). But if the trustees are not merely authorised, but are imperatively directed to invest on certain forms of investment, they are bound to obey the direction, however much they may disapprove (c). And also where they are expressly authorised to allow money to remain on an unsatisfactory security for the purpose of conveniencing a purchaser, they are justified in doing so (d).

Art. 40.

8. Again, a trustee must not, in the absence of express authority, invest on trade security; as, for instance, in the shares of a public company, which are in reality no security at all, but merely documents conferring a right to speculative profits (e). It was on this ground that, before the passing of the Acts of Parliament before referred to, trustees were not entitled to invest even in stock of the banks of England or Ireland, or in the stock of the old East India Company (f).

Should not invest in trade, or shares of trading companies.

1. It is a mistake to suppose that a trustee is free from responsibility if he invests trust funds in some of the securities authorised by the settlement or by statute. must take such care as a reasonably cautious man would use, having regard, not only to the interests of those who are entitled to the income, but to the interests of those who will take in future. It is not like a man investing his own money, where his object may be a larger present income than he can get from a safer security; but trustees are bound to preserve the money for those entitled to the corpus in remainder, and they are bound to invest it in such a way as will produce a reasonable income for those enjoying the income for the present. And in doing so, they must use such caution as a reasonably prudent man would use with reference to transactions of a similar nature in which he might be engaged (g). Not that this means that a different degree of care is required in regard to the conduct of the business of a trust, according to whether there are persons to take in the future, or whether the trust fund is held in trust for one beneficiary absolutely. The question, in either case, is the due care of the capital sum (h); and in either case, the trustee is not allowed the same discretion in investing the trust fund as if he were a person, sui juris, dealing with his own estate. Business men of ordinary prudence may, and frequently do, select investments which are more or less of a speculative character; but it is the duty of a trustee to confine himself not only to the class of investments which are permitted by the settlement or by statute, but to avoid all investments of that class which are attended with hazard (i).

2. Thus, if any of the securities mentioned in the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), were to become very much depreciated, so as to render them a hazardous investment, the fact that they are made permissible as trust investments by that statute would not, it is conceived, protect a trustee who should invest trust funds upon them. And, a fortiori, would this be the case if he were to make such an investment for the purpose of procuring a larger income for the tenant for life. At the same time it must be acknowledged that, save with regard to investments on mortgage, the statutory power is so guarded that it is difficult to foresee any case in which a trustee could be held liable for investing on any of the permitted securities. Formerly it was held, that where a non-British Government stock was above par, and within a few years of redemption at par, it was not a proper investment for trust funds; because the effect of such an investment might be to benefit the tenant for life at the expense of those in remainder (k). However, the intention of Parliament, as expressed in the Act of 1893, appears to be to fix a standard of prudence for such cases, viz., that a trustee should not pay more than a premium of 15 per cent. above the redemption price, and that the period of redemption should be at least fifteen years distant at the date of investment. This clause, no doubt, only refers to the investments in sub-ss. (g), (i), (k), (l), and (m) of s. 1, but, a fortiori, a trustee who applied the rule to the other permissible securities would be safe. It may also be mentioned here, that under special circumstances, a change of investment from one which is safe to one which, although permitted, is less safe, for the purpose of affording a larger income to the life tenant, may be proper enough if the trustee acts in good faith: for instance, where property is settled on a parent for life with remainder to his children, and it is very important that the parent should have an increased income for their better support and education (l). In such a case, an investment in a redeemable stock above par would not merely benefit the tenant for life, but the remaindermen also. Generally it may (it is conceived) be safely laid down, that where trustees act in good faith, and not collusively for the manifestly sole benefit of the tenant for life, they will not now be held liable for changing a first class security for one which is authorised by the Act, and which pays a better interest (m).

investing on mortgage.

3. Nevertheless, trustees should not invest on mortgage where it is not reasonable, merely to accommodate one of their beneficiaries. Still less ought they to do so merely to accommodate an outsider. Thus they would never be justified in lending a sum of stock (and, a fortiori, they would not be justified in selling it and lending the proceeds) on mortgage of real estate bearing interest at the same rate as the stock itself. For no possible benefit could accrue to the beneficiaries; and on the other hand, the security of the government would be changed for the less reliable security of private property. Consequently, such a transaction would afford the strongest presumption of an intention to accommodate the mortgagor (n).

Precautions to be observed by trustees who invest on mortgage.

First legal mortgage alone permissible.

1. As above stated, trustees are not freed from responsibility because they invest on authorised securities; but more especially is this the case when they lend trust funds on the security of a mortgage. The very simplicity of the authority, empowering them to invest on "real securities," is apt to mislead, and gives no indication of the severity with which the court regards such loans by trustees. In the first place, in the absence of express authority, trustees who desire to invest on mortgage, are restricted to first legal mortgages of land. The mortgage should be a first mortgage (o), because otherwise trustees might not have funds available to redeem a prior incumbrancer who might threaten to foreclose. It should be a legal mortgage (p), because the protection afforded by the legal estate prevents any prior incumbrancer, of whom the trustees may have no notice, getting priority over them; and if trustees do invest in a mere equitable mortgage (for instance, a mortgage by way of covenant to surrender copyholds (q)), and any loss accrues, they will, it is apprehended (although this has never been expressly decided), be liable to make it good (r). It would seem, however, that there is no objection to the security being a sub-mortgage, as the trustees get the legal estate and in effect the additional security of the covenant of the original mortgagor (s). Unless the settlement expressly authorised a mortgage of leaseholds, trustees could formerly only properly advance trust funds on the security of freeholds or copyholds; because the statutes which empowered trustees to invest on mortgage, confined them to mortgages of real estate; and leaseholds, however long and however free from rent and covenants, were not real estate (t). However, as above stated (u), s. 5 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), authorises investment on mortgage of certain long leaseholds held at nominal rents.

Art. 40.

2. In the second place, the mortgage must not be a contributory mortgage, that is, a mortgage where the trustees join with other persons in a joint loan; for, in that case, the trustees would be putting it out of their power to realize without the joinder of third parties. In other words, they would be intrusting the trust property to persons who were not trustees of it. A contributory mortgage is therefore prima facie a breach of trust (x).

Must not join in a contributory mortgage.

3. In the third place, they must take precautions not to advance too much money on the security offered. The law on this point was altered in favour of trustees by s. 4 of the Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59) (now repealed, and re-enacted in s. 8 of the Trustee Act, 1893). Previously to December 24th, 1888, the duty of a trustee who was proposing to advance money on mortgage was as follows:—He was bound (as he still is) to ascertain the real value of the property, and for that purpose to employ a valuer and solicitor (y) of his own, and not trust to the valuer of the mortgagor (z); and to instruct such valuer that the valuation was required for the purpose of considering the advisability of investing trust funds on the security of the property (a). For a man may bond fide form his opinion, and yet look at the case in a totally different way when he knows on whose behalf he is acting. Moreover, he was (as he still is) bound to exercise his own judgment in the selection of the valuer, and not leave it to his solicitor (b). In the next place, he was not entitled to advance more than two-thirds of the amount at which the property was valued (c) (and that is still the same); and if it was house property not more than one-half (d); and if it were trade property, the value of which depended on the continued prosperity of the trade, it would have been hazardous to advance even so much as that (e); and if he did invest on the security of real property used for trade purposes, he was bound to altogether disregard the value of the trade (f). However, these proportions were not inflexibly observed; and if, when the advance was made, the property was approximately up to the standards above indicated, trustees were not held liable for subsequent deterioration (g).

4. By s. 8 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), which applies to all mortgages made since December 24th, 1888, the duty of a trustee under such circumstances is considerably lightened. By that section it is enacted that—

Art. 40.

“(1.) A trustee lending money on the security of any property on which he can lawfully lend shall not be chargeable with breach of trust by reason only of the proportion borne by the amount of the loan to the value of the property at the time when the loan was made, provided that it appears to the court that in making the loan the trustee was acting upon a report as to the value of the property made by a person whom he reasonably believed to be an able practical surveyor or valuer (h) instructed and employed independently of any owner of the property, whether such surveyor or valuer carried on business in the locality where the property is situate or elsewhere, and that the amount of the loan does not exceed two equal third parts of the value of the property as stated in the report, and that the loan was made under the advice of the surveyor or valuer expressed in the report.”

5. It will be seen, therefore, that the Act makes a very considerable alteration in the law, and it is apprehended that in future a trustee advancing trust money on mortgage will be safe if he observes the following particulars, viz. :—

Digest of the precautions as to value now to be observed.

- (1.) He must act on the valuation and report of a surveyor or valuer ; not necessarily a local one ;
- (2.) He must have reasonable grounds for believing the surveyor or valuer to be an able practical man. For this purpose it is apprehended that the trustee must still exercise his own judgment, and not trust blindly to the nomination of his solicitor without inquiry ;
- (3.) The surveyor must not be the surveyor of the mortgagor in the matter ;
- (4.) The surveyor must be instructed by the trustee to make the valuation for him ; and it is apprehended that his instructions should state that the trustee requires a valuation for the purpose of considering the advisability of investing trust funds on the security of the property ;
- (5.) The surveyor must not merely value the property, but must advise the trustee that the property is a proper investment for the money proposed to be lent ;

(h) The words “reasonably believed” do not refer to the words “instructed and employed” (Re Walker, Walker v. Walker, 62 L. T. 447 ; Re Somerset, Somerset v. Lord Poulett, 68 L. T. 614).

Art. 40.

- (6.) The trustee must not lend more than two-thirds of the surveyor's valuation, but he may lend that much, irrespective of the tenure of the property, or the purposes for which it is used.

Statutory precautions only relate to value, and not to the nature of the security.

6. It must, however, be borne in mind that the Act merely says that if the above precautions are taken a trustee shall not be liable for breach of trust by reason only of the proportion borne by the amount of the loan to the value of the property; and therefore, a trustee would still be liable for advancing the money on property of a speculative character (such as a manufactory, a brickfield (i), or a china clay field (j)), on the ground not that he advanced too large a sum, but that he ought not to have advanced trust money on such a security at all (k).

Duty of trustees with regard to title of property mortgaged to them.

7. But in addition to getting a legal first mortgage of property of a proper value, the trustee was formerly bound to see that the mortgagor had a good legal title free from incumbrances (other than rent-charges created under the Drainage Acts or the Improvement of Land Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 114)). Here, again, the burden has been to some extent lifted from the shoulders of a trustee, by s. 8 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (re-enacting s. 4 of the repealed Act of 1888), by which it is enacted that—

“(2.) A trustee lending money on the security of any leasehold property shall not be chargeable with breach of trust only upon the ground that in making such loan he dispensed either wholly or partly with the production or investigation of the lessor's title.

“(3.) A trustee shall not be chargeable with breach of trust only upon the ground that in effecting the purchase of or in lending money upon the security of any property he has accepted a shorter title than the title which a purchaser is, in the absence of a special contract, entitled to require, if in the opinion of the court the title accepted be such as a person acting with prudence and caution would have accepted.

“(4.) This section applies to transfers of existing securities as well as to new securities, and to investments made as well before as after the commencement of this Act, except where an action or other proceeding was pending with reference thereto on the twenty-fourth day of December one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight." Art. 40.

Lastly, trustees should not enter into any arrangement with the mortgagor for the continuance of the loan for a period of years (l); for they would thereby fetter themselves in the event of it being desirable (by reason of depreciation of the land or otherwise) to realise. Must not engage not to realise for a long period.

ART. 41.—Duty of Trustee to see that he pays Trust Moneys to the right Persons.

(1) The whole responsibility of handing the trust property to the persons entitled formerly fell upon the trustee; and if he handed it to the wrong person, either through mistake on his part (m), or in consequence of some fraud practised upon him, he had formerly to make the loss good, however careful he might have been. Since August 14th, 1896, the court has power to excuse such a mistake made honestly and reasonably (n); but, nevertheless, in cases of doubt the trustee should apply to the court for its direction (o).

(2) If, however, the person who is really entitled to trust property is not the beneficiary who appears on the face of the settlement (but someone who claims through him), and the trustees, having neither express nor constructive authority.

1. Thus, where a trustee made a payment to one who produced a forged authority from the beneficiary, the trustee, and not the beneficiary, had to bear the loss. For, as was said by Lord NORTHINGTON (q), “a trustee, whether he be a private person or a body corporate, must see to the reality of the authority empowering him to dispose of the trust money; for if the transfer is made without the authority of the owner, the act is a nullity, and in consideration of law and equity the right remains as before.”

2. So, again, trustees who paid over the trust fund to wrong persons, upon the faith of a marriage certificate, which turned out to be a forgery, were made responsible for so much of the trust fund as could not be recovered from those who had wrongfully received it (r). The question whether an honest and reasonable mistake as to the nature of a forged document, or as to the construction of an obscure one would now be excused under the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), is discussed infra, Art. 76.

And similarly, trustees who have distributed a trust fund upon what turns out to be an erroneous, although bonâ fide, construction of the trust instrument, have hitherto been held

4. Formerly, a trustee who paid trust money to the attorney of a beneficiary, was liable, if it turned out that the power was revoked by death of the beneficiary or otherwise. However, by s. 23 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53) (re-enacting 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 26), it was enacted that—

Paying under power of attorney.

“A trustee acting or paying money in good faith under or in pursuance of any power of attorney shall not be liable for any such act or payment by reason of the fact that at the time of the payment or act the person who gave the power of attorney was dead or had done some act to avoid the power, if this fact was not known to the trustee at the time of his so acting or paying. Provided that nothing in this section shall affect the right of any person entitled to the money against the person to whom the payment is made, and that the person so entitled shall have the same remedy against the person to whom the payment is made as he would have had against the trustee.”

1. In Leslie v. Baillie (u), a testator who died, and whose will was proved in England, bequeathed a legacy to a married woman whose domicile, as well as that of her husband, was in Scotland. The husband died a few months after the testator. After his decease, the executors of the testator paid the legacy to the widow. It was proved that, according to the Scotch law, the payment should have been made to the husband's personal representatives. It was, however, held, that in the absence of proof that the executors of the settlor knew the Scotch law on the subject, the payment to the widow was a good payment.

3. Trustees are not bound to hand over the trust fund to the mortgagee of their beneficiary, where accounts are pending between the mortgagee and mortgagor (y).

4. On the other hand, a new trustee is liable to make good moneys paid by him bonâ fide to a beneficiary, if the papers relating to the trust comprise a notice of an incumbrance created by that beneficiary depriving him of the right to receive the money. For if the trustee had acquainted himself, as he was bound to do, with the trust documents and papers, he would have found what the true state of the case was (z). Where, however, no amount of search would have disclosed the notice, the trustee would of course not be liable, as his liability entirely depends upon his shirking the duty of search, which the law casts upon him (z).

ART. 42.—Duty of Trustee not to delegate his Duties or Powers.

(1) A trustee may not delegate his duties or powers (or à fortiori, the receipt of trust moneys) either to a stranger (a) or to his co-trustee (b), save only

(2) But even where a trustee may safely permit another to receive trust property, he will not be justified in allowing it to remain in such other person's custody without due inquiry (h), nor for a longer period than the circumstances of the case require (i).

This rule is founded on the maxim delegatus non potest delegare. It is therefore an invariable rule, that, even in cases where a trustee may employ an agent, he must still exercise his own judgment on every question, and must not give the agent carte blanche to do what he may think fit (k). General principle.

The general principle as to the impropriety of delegating fiduciary duties and powers has been modified, both by judicial decisions and by statute; but, although the Act 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 31 (now repealed and re-enacted by s. 24 of the Trustee Act, 1893), enacted that—

“a trustee shall (without prejudice to the provisions of the instrument, if any, creating the trust) be chargeable only for money and securities actually received by him, notwithstanding his signing any receipt for the sake of conformity, and shall be accountable only for his own acts, receipts, neglects, or defaults, and not for those of any other trustee, nor for any banker, broker, or other person with whom any trust moneys or securities may be deposited";

yet, as was pointed out by Lord SELBORNE, in the leading case of Speight v. Gaunt (l), this statute does not authorise a trustee, at his own mere will and pleasure, to delegate the execution of the trust and the custody of the trust moneys to strangers in the absence of a moral necessity from the usage of mankind for the employment of such an agency.

Effect of
modification.

Indeed, the only effect of the section appears to be, to shift the onus of proof from the trustee to the beneficiaries; so that whereas formerly it lay upon a trustee whose conduct was impugned to prove that he had acted from necessity according to ordinary business usage, it now lies on the beneficiaries, who make a charge of breach of trust, to prove that the trustee did not act from necessity or conformably to the universal custom (m).

Opinion of KEKEWICH, J., as to trustee's liability for his agents.

The question was treated with great perspicuity by Mr. Justice KEKEWICH, in the case of Re Weall, Andrews v. Weall (n), where his lordship said: "Consider for a moment the position of that special agent called a trustee as regards the position of sub-agents. He certainly has the right to appoint them, if and so far as the work of the trust reasonably requires. For instance, he may appoint a broker to make or realise investments, or a solicitor to do legal business; and the power of employment involves that of remuneration at the cost of the trust estate. The limit of the power of employment is, as pointed out in the well-known case of Speight v. Gaunt (l), reasonableness; and reasonableness must also, I think, be the limit of the power of remuneration. A trustee is bound to exercise discretion in the choice of his agents, but, so long as he selects persons properly qualified, he cannot be made responsible for their intelligence or their honesty. He does not in any sense guarantee the performance of their duties. It does not, however, follow that he can entrust his agents with any duties which they are willing to undertake, or pay them or agree to pay them any remuneration which they see fit to demand. The trustee must consider these matters for himself, and the court would be disposed to support any conclusion at which he arrives, however erroneous, provided it really is his conclusion—that is the outcome of such consideration as might reasonably be expected to be given to a like matter, by a man of ordinary prudence, guided by such rules and arguments as generally guide such a man in his own affairs.”

(l) 9 App. Cas. 1.

(n) 42 Ch. D. 674.

(m) See Re Brier, Brier v. Evison, 26 Ch. D. 238.

Art. 42.

It must also be pointed out, that although trustees must always exercise their own judgment, and not surrender it to agents and, a fortiori, not to beneficiaries, yet they are not debarred from inquiring what are the wishes and opinions of any of the parties interested. As Lord SELBORNE said in Fraser v. Murdoch(o): “In this case, I find no indication of an improper purpose. . . . It would be extremely dangerous to hold that trustees, having such a discretion to exercise, might not freely discuss with the beneficiaries the reasons for and against a particular decision, without running the risk of being held to act against their own judgment, if they should disregard, in the end, objections to which they had thought it right in the first instance to direct attention.”

Trustee may consult his beneficiaries.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF PARAGRAPH (1).

1. Nevertheless, although a trustee may listen to the opinions and wishes of others, he must exercise his own judgment. Thus a trustee for sale of ordinary property, who leaves the whole conduct of the sale to his co-trustee, cannot shield himself from responsibility for the latter's negligence by saying that he left the matter entirely in his hands (p). For the settlor has entrusted the trust property and its management to all the trustees, and the beneficiaries are entitled to the benefit of their collective wisdom and experience (q).

Must not leave trust business entirely to co-trustee.

Art. 42.

Should not associate a stranger in
ment

2. Conversely, a trustee must not associate with himself another person (who is not one of the trustees) in the management of the trust estate. For the settlor has trusted him, and not the other person, and by allowing the latter to have the joint control of the property, the trustee puts it out of his own power to deal with it promptly and effectually in case of necessity (r).

advisers.

3. So, again, where trust property has to be valued for the purposes of sale, or property offered to trustees as a security for trust money has to be valued, or trust money has to be invested—the trustees must themselves choose the valuer or broker, and must not delegate that duty to their solicitors, nor even to one of themselves (s). No doubt trustees can employ a solicitor for legal matters which the trustee is not competent to undertake, for that is necessary; but the choice of a broker or valuer is not properly the business of solicitors, but is a matter on which a trustee should exercise his own judgment (t). Of course, it must be understood that this does not preclude a trustee from asking advice or information as to the character of a broker, valuer, or other necessary agent, or from asking his solicitors to submit the names of such. All that is meant is, that he must judge for himself on the facts reported to him to guide his choice, and must not delegate the duty of choosing the agent either to his solicitors or to anyone else. In any case he should not choose an “outside” broker (s).

etc

4. A power of leasing cannot be delegated, for in its exercise much judgment is required. The fitness and responsibility of the lessee, the adequacy of the rent, the length of the term to be granted, and the nature of the covenants, stipulations, and conditions which the lease should contain, are all matters requiring knowledge and prudence (u). On similar grounds, a trustee cannot delegate (as, for instance, by power of attorney) the execution of a trust or power to sell property. For the settlor has placed confidence in his discretion as to price and conditions, and it is a breach of that confidence to pitch-fork the entire business on to another person, without retaining any control or authority over it (x). On the other hand, a trustee may appoint an attorney merely to pass the legal estate, as such an act involves no discretion (a). So where trustees had power to elect a clergyman, it was held that they could not appoint proxies to vote; but when the choice was once made, they could appoint proxies for the purpose of signing the formal presentation (b). However, the rule yields to necessity, and trustees may appoint an attorney to act for them in a foreign country, even in matters involving judgment and discretion (c).

Art. 42.

5. On the other hand, where the property is of a nature (such as stocks or shares) which, practically speaking, a trustee cannot personally sell, or which it would be distinctly contrary to the ordinary usage of mankind for him to sell personally, he may employ an agent or broker, so long as he acts as prudently as he would have done for himself in a like case (d). For "where an investment of trust moneys is proper to be made upon securities which are purchased and sold upon the public exchanges, either in town or country, the employment of a broker, for the purpose of purchasing those securities, and doing all things usually done by a broker which may be necessary for that purpose, is prima facie legitimate and proper. A trustee is not bound himself to undertake the business (for which he may be very ill-qualified) of seeking to obtain them in some other way; as, for example, by public advertisement or by private inquiry" (e).

May employ agents where morally obliged to do so.

6. So trustees may appoint stewards, bailiffs, workmen and other agents of the like kind; for there is a moral necessity for them to do so (f). And on the same ground, they may employ solicitors, valuers (g), auctioneers, and other skilled persons to do acts which they themselves are not competent to do. They may employ an accountant where their accounts are of a complicated nature, and the occasion is one in which, according to the usage of business, a prudent man, acting for himself, would employ such a person (h). But of course trustees are not entitled to have their books of account of income and expenditure regularly kept by an accountant, merely in order to save themselves trouble. As Lord HALSBURY said, in Re Whiteley, Whiteley v. Learoyd (i), "I think it is quite clear, that a trustee is entitled to rely upon skilled persons in matters in which he cannot be expected to be experienced. He may perhaps rely upon a lawyer on some matters of law, and in this case I do not deny that he would be entitled to rely upon a valuer upon a pure question of valuation. But unless one examines with reference to what question the skilled person gives advice, it is possible to confuse the reliance which may be properly placed upon the skill of a skilled person with the judgment which the trustee himself is bound to form on the subject of the performance of his trust. I do not think it is true to say that one is entitled to consider the special qualities or degree of intelligence of the particular trustee. Persons who accept that office must be supposed to accept it with the responsibility at all events for the possession of ordinary care and prudence."

Whether

7. Lord HALSBURY's phrase, "he may, perhaps, rely upon a lawyer in some matters of law," referred, it is conceived, to the doubt thrown upon that proposition by the decision of the late Lord ROMILLY in Hopgood v. Parkin (k), where that learned judge carried the liability of trustees for the acts and defaults of their agents to a height which, it is with humility suggested, was by no means justified, either

(f) Re Whiteley, Whiteley v. Learoyd, 12 App. Cas. 727.

(g) With regard to valuers, a trustee is now expressly authorised to act on a valuer's report and advice as to the value of property offered as a security for trust funds (Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 8, see supra, p. 213).

on principle or authority. In that case, trustees, having trust funds to lend on mortgage, employed a solicitor to investigate the mortgagor's title. Owing to the solicitor's negligence, in failing to make proper inquiries as to previous incumbrances, the trust moneys advanced on the mortgage were to a large extent lost, and his lordship held that the trustees must replace them. But it is difficult to understand upon what grounds the learned judge based his opinion. The trustees were right in investing on mortgage: they were right in employing a skilled person to investigate the real value of the security; indeed, it is apprehended, from the remarks of the late Sir GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in Re Cooper and Allen (l), that it was the duty of the trustees to employ a skilled person. In addition to which, there was a moral necessity for them to employ a skilled agent to investigate the title, and they were but acting conformably to the general "usage of mankind, and as prudently for the trust as for themselves, and according to the usage of business" (m). If, then, they were right in employing the solicitor to investigate the title for them, upon what possible ground could they be held responsible for their agent's default? As Lord HARDWICKE said, in Ex parte Belchier (n), if the defendant "is chargeable in this case, no man in his senses would act. . . . This Court has laid down a rule with regard to the transactions of assignees, and more so of trustees, so as not to strike a terror into mankind acting for the benefit of others, and not for their own"; and his lordship then proceeded to lay down the rule as above stated. It is with great respect submitted, that Lord ROMILLY confused the case with those in which it has been held that a trustee is responsible for a breach of trust which he has committed bonâ fide and under skilled advice. The distinction, is, however, clear. The trustees had not done anything wrong. They had not committed any breach of trust at the instance of another. They had merely lent money through the medium of an agency, which they were entitled, and indeed bound, to employ, on the ground of moral necessity, and they ought therefore to have been discharged from the loss. Had there been a distinct breach of some duty which the settlor had cast upon the trustees, then, although they might have taken and followed the best advice procurable, they would, no doubt, have been properly held responsible; but here, the only possible breach of duty was the negligence of an agent, and, as has been said above, a trustee is only responsible for his agent where he has improperly employed one. Moreover, since the above was first written, Lord Justice LINDLEY, in Speight v. Gaunt (o), has expressly dissented from Hopgood v. Parkin, and, indeed, it seems to be quite inconsistent with the judgments of the learned Lords of Appeal in that case.

Whether a trustee rightly employing an agent may trust him with trust money.

8. Even where a trustee is justified in delegating the sale or purchase of property to other persons (such as brokers, solicitors, and the like), it does not necessarily follow that he is justified in giving them the control of the purchase-money. That question must be regarded as a separate and distinct one, to be solved on its own merits, but by the application of the same principle, viz., whether or not there is a moral necessity or a conformity to common usage. Thus, where a trustee handed money to a solicitor for the purpose of re-investment, and the solicitor professed to have, but in reality had not, invested it, but had used it for his own purposes, and himself paid interest on it for some years until his death, it was held that the trustee was liable (p); for he ought not to have entrusted the money to a solicitor when there was no necessity.

Statutory authority to entrust trust bond to solicitor or banker.

9. On similar grounds, it was formerly held, in Re Bellamy and Metropolitan Board (q), that trustees were not entitled to authorise their solicitor to receive purchase-money payable to them, notwithstanding s. 56 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41). However, by s. 17 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53) (re-enacting s. 2 of the Trustee Act, 1888), it is enacted as follows:—

(q) 24 Ch. D. 387.

Art. 42.

“(1.) A trustee may appoint a solicitor to be his agent to receive and give a discharge for any money or valuable consideration or property receivable by the trustee under the trust, by permitting the solicitor to have the custody of, and to produce, a deed containing any such receipt as is referred to in section 56 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 ; and a trustee shall not be chargeable with breach of trust by reason only of his having made or concurred in making any such appointment ; and the producing of any such deed by the solicitor shall have the same validity and effect under the said section as if the person appointing the solicitor had not been a trustee.

“(2.) A trustee may appoint a banker or solicitor to be his agent to receive and give a discharge for any money payable to the trustee under or by virtue of a policy of assurance, by permitting the banker or solicitor to have the custody of and to produce the policy of assurance with a receipt signed by the trustee, and a trustee shall not be chargeable with a breach of trust by reason only of his having made or concurred in making any such appointment.

“(3.) Nothing in this section shall exempt a trustee from any liability which he would have incurred if this Act had not been passed, in case he permits any such money, valuable consideration, or property to remain in the hands or under the control of the banker or solicitor for a period longer than is reasonably necessary to enable the banker or solicitor (as the case may be) to pay or transfer the same to the trustee.

“(4.) This section applies only where the money or valuable consideration or property is received after the 24th day of December one thousand eight hundred and eighty eight.

“(5.) Nothing in this section shall authorise a trustee to do anything which he is in express terms forbidden to do, or to omit anything which he is in express terms directed to do, by the instrument creating the trust.”

The section is not, perhaps, so happily expressed as it might be. For instance, can a trustee authorise his solicitor to receive consideration money, except by permitting him to have the custody of the deed, etc. ? And where the receipt is indorsed on a deed, and not contained in the body thereof, can that deed be said to be “a deed containing any such receipt as is referred to in the 56th section of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881” ?

The first of these queries is, it is submitted, by no means hypercritical, and in cases where any money or property is receivable by a trustee on any occasion where the execution of a deed by the trustee is not necessary (as, for example, the payment of a legacy by executors to the trustees of the legatee's marriage settlement), considerable doubt must exist as to whether the payment can be properly made to the trustee's solicitor under this sub-section, even although the solicitor be expressly authorised by the trustee to receive it. This view receives some support from the provisions contained in sub-s. (2), which expressly authorise a trustee to appoint a solicitor his agent to receive policy moneys by permitting him to have the custody of and to produce the policy with a receipt signed by the trustee. For policy money would certainly fall within the first sub-section as "money receivable by such trustee"; and if, under sub-s. (1), the trustee could appoint a solicitor in any other way than that indicated, there would have been no necessity for expressly authorising (by sub-s. (2)) a trustee to appoint a solicitor to be his agent to receive and give a discharge for policy moneys, and for declaring that no trustee shall be chargeable with a breach of trust by reason only of his having made or concurred in making an appointment of a solicitor for that purpose. Anyhow, the point does not appear to be free from doubt.

With regard to the second query, it is probable that the court would consider an indorsed receipt as equivalent to a receipt contained in the deed on which it is indorsed, within the meaning of the sub-section.

It will be perceived that sub-s. (1) does not authorise a trustee to appoint anyone to receive money, valuable consideration, or property, except a solicitor. Consequently, the decision in Re Flower and Metropolitan Board of Works (r), that one of several trustees cannot in general be authorised by his co-trustees to receive and give a good receipt for trust moneys, still holds good. It is apprehended, however, that where one of the trustees is a solicitor, the money may be paid to him on production of a deed containing a receipt, notwithstanding that he may not be acting as the solicitor to the trustees.

10. Apart from statutory authority, where there is a moral necessity to entrust the agent with the money, a trustee will be justified in doing so, as was decided by the House of Lords in the important case of Speight v. Gaunt (s). There, the respondent, Isaac Gaunt, being acting trustee under the will of John Speight, a stuff manufacturer at Bradford, wished to invest the sum of £15,275, part of the trust estate, in the securities of municipal corporations in Yorkshire, and for that purpose he employed a stockbroker, named Cooke, to buy the stock for him. Cooke having falsely represented that he had purchased the stock, the respondent gave him cheques for the amount, which Cooke embezzled. The beneficiaries then sought to make the trustee liable for the sum embezzled by Cooke. In giving judgment, exonerating the trustee from liability, the Earl of SELBORNE said: "In the early case of Ex parte Belchier, before Lord HARDWICKE (t), it was determined, that trustees are not bound personally to transact such business connected with, or arising out of, the proper duties of their trust, as, according to the usual mode of conducting business of a like nature, persons acting with reasonable care and prudence on their own account would ordinarily conduct through mercantile agents; and that when, according to the usual and regular course of such business, moneys, receivable or payable, ought to pass through the hands of such mercantile agents, that course may properly be followed by trustees, though the moneys are trust moneys; and that if, under such circumstances, and without any other misconduct or default on the part of the trustees, a loss takes place through any fraud or neglect of the agents employed, the trustees are not liable to make good such loss." His lordship, after discussing the question whether it was proper to employ a broker at all, which he answered in the affirmative, continued: "The next subject of inquiry is, whether it was a just and proper consequence of that employment, according to the principle of Ex parte Belchier, that the trust money should pass through his hands. . . . The whole evidence satisfies me that the usual and regular course of business on the London Exchange is, for the Art. 42. money, under such circumstances, to pass through the broker's hands." Their lordships, therefore, exonerated the trustee from responsibility.

May employ a debt collector. 11. So, again, where there are numerous small debts to be collected, it cannot be expected of executors or trustees that they should personally call on each debtor. Consequently, if under such circumstances they employ, in the usual course of business, a debt collector, and the money collected is lost by reason of the collector's insolvency, the trustees are primâ facie not responsible (u).

Remitting money through banker. 12. On the ground of conformity to universal usage, trustees may remit money through the medium of a respectable bank, as being the most convenient and the safest mode (x); but they should pay the money into the bank as trustees, and eo nomine (y).

Custody of securities. 13. It is obvious that several trustees cannot all have the physical custody of the trust securities. This is of no great importance where they have the legal estate in lands, or where they are holders of registered stocks. But where the securities are "bearer securities," the matter becomes of importance. In such cases they should not leave them either with their solicitor (z) or with one of themselves (a), but should place them in the custody of their banker (b).

Joining with others in a sale. 14. On the principles enunciated in the article now under consideration, it has been held, that if "trustees for sale join with any other person in a joint sale of the trust property and any other property, whether that person be a trustee himself or be a beneficial owner, they must take care that their share of the purchase-money is paid to them; and the purchaser must take care of that likewise, because he can only pay trust money to the trustees. Therefore, when they do join with other people the purchase-money

1. On similar principles (viz., conformity to ordinary business usage), a trustee may allow an auctioneer who is selling the trust property, to receive the deposit money; but he must not allow it to remain in the auctioneer's hands for an unreasonable time (e). Leaving money in hands of auctioneer.

2. So, again, a trustee may, and indeed should, deposit trust moneys in a respectable bank pending investment; and he will not be liable for the failure of the bank, unless he left the money there for an unnecessarily long period. For it is according to the common usage of mankind to make use of banks for the safe custody of money (f). But a trustee will be liable where he has unnecessarily left trust moneys in the hands of a banker who fails, when he ought to have invested them; or where he has paid money to a banker or broker for investment and has neglected for some time to make inquiries as to such investment (g); and the usual clause indemnifying him against the acts or defaults of others will not protect him (h). In a comparatively recent case, KAY, J., held that six months was the maximum time for which trustees should deposit money in a bank; and that if at the expiration of that period no other investment was available, the trustees ought to invest in consols. In the case in question the trustees had kept the money on deposit for fourteen months, and were held responsible for the loss caused by the failure of the bank (i).

Art. 43.ART. 43.—*Duty of Trustees to act jointly where more than one.

Where there are more trustees than one, all must join in the execution of the trust (k), save only—

- (a) where the settlement or a competent court otherwise directs ;
- (b) as to the receipt of income (l) ;
- (c) as to such matters as can be lawfully delegated under Art. 42.

This article is a corollary of Art. 42. For, if trustees cannot delegate their duties, it follows that they must all personally perform those duties, and not appoint one of themselves to manage the business of the trust. It is not unusual to find one of several trustees spoken of as the “acting trustee,” meaning the trustee who personally interests himself in the trust affairs, and whose decisions are merely indorsed by his co-trustees. The court, however, does not recognise any such delegation ; for the settlor has trusted all the trustees, and it behoves each and every of them to exercise his individual judgment and discretion on every matter, and not blindly to leave all questions to his co-trustees or co-trustee (m).

 For instance, where there is a trust to sell real estate, with a discretionary power to postpone the sale the property must be sold within a reasonable time, unless the trustees are unanimously in favour of a postponement (o).

2. So, all the trustees must join in the receipt of money, unless, of course, the settlement authorises one of them to give good receipts and discharges. For, as KAY, J., said in Re Flower and Metropolitan Board (p), "The theory of every trust is, that the trustees shall not allow the trust moneys to get into the hands of any one of them, but that all shall exercise control over them. They must take care that they are in the hands of all, or invested in their names, or placed in a proper bank in their joint name. The reason why more than one trustee is appointed, is, that they shall take care that the moneys shall not get into the hands of one of them alone; and they have no right, as between themselves and the cestuis que trusts, unless the circumstances are such as to make it imperatively necessary to do so, to authorise one of themselves to receive the moneys" (q). Must all join in receipt.

3. All investments of trust moneys should be made in the joint names of the trustees, for otherwise it would enable one trustee to realize and appropriate the money (r). But this must of course yield to necessity, as, for instance, where shares were specifically bequeathed to trustees upon certain trusts, and it was found that by the regulations of the company the shares could only be registered in the name of one trustee (s). Investments should be in joint names.

4. As a general rule, however, although trustees must join in the receipt of capital, it is permissible for them to allow Income.

(n) Luke v. South Kensington Hotel Co., supra. It is otherwise, however, with regard to charitable trustees: see Charitable Trusts Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 110), s. 13. one of their number to receive the income. Thus, in the case of rents, the trustees may delegate the collection to one of their number or to a rent collector. For it would be impossible for them all to collect the rents (t). But if there is any fear of misappropriation by the collecting trustee, the others should notify the tenants not to pay him again (u). A similar rule applies to the receipt of dividends on stocks or shares, from the necessity of the case, because the companies are not bound to recognise trusts, and always pay to the first of several joint holders (x).

Trustee
joining in receipt for conformity.

5. In cases where, from necessity, a trustee may permit his co-trustee to receive moneys owing to the estate, (e.g., where he permits him to collect rents), then, even though he join in the receipt for such moneys, and thereby acknowledge that he has received them, he will not be liable if he can prove (y) that he did not in fact receive them, and only joined in the receipt for the sake of conformity (z). For one of several trustees cannot alone give a good receipt, unless expressly empowered to do so by the settlement; nor can trustees empower one of their number to receive and give a good receipt for trust moneys, and all must, therefore, join (a). So that, although at law the signature of a trustee is (or rather was (b)) conclusive evidence that the money came to his hands, "equity, which pursues truth, will decree according to the justice and verity of the fact" (c), and will hold that, under the circumstances, seeing that it is an act which the very nature of his office will not permit him to decline (d), it does not amount to an admission that he actually received the money. Art. 43.

6. Even where a trustee may safely permit his co-trustee to receive trust moneys, he will, nevertheless, be liable if he permit him to retain them for a longer period than the circumstances of the case necessitate (e). Thus, in Walker v. Symonds (f), D., one of three trustees, received part of the trust money, and, with the assent of the other trustees, invested it in East India Company's bills, payable to him. These were paid off, and thereupon S., another of the trustees, wrote to D., requesting him to invest the money. D., however, begged that it might remain in his hands on mortgage. The other trustees assented to this. The mortgage was never, in fact, prepared, although S. made frequent applications to D., who finally died insolvent five years after first receiving the money. Upon this state of facts it was held that the trustees were guilty of a breach of trust in permitting the money to remain on bills payable to D. alone, and in leaving the state of the funds unascertained for five years.

Must not permit co-trustee to retain trust money.

7. For like reasons, trustees, in whose names trust moneys are banked, should not authorise the bankers to pay cheques signed by one only of their number; for that would be equivalent to giving the sole control of the trust funds to one trustee, whereas the beneficiaries are entitled to the safeguard of the trustees' joint control (g). A trustee may, however, entrust his co-trustee with a crossed cheque, signed by both of them, for delivery to the beneficiary (h).

Must not permit co-trustee to sign cheques

May allow title deeds to remain in custody of co-trustee.

Art. 43. for any other rule would be productive of the greatest inconvenience (i). But it seems that the rule is different with regard to bonds payable to bearer (k).

Must be joint mortgagees.

9. Apart from other reasons, the trust money cannot be advanced to one of the trustees on mortgage, however good the security may seem: for he cannot act both as mortgagor and mortgagee; and without his joinder in the latter capacity, his co-trustees cannot legally act (l).

ART. 44.—Duty of Trustee not to set up Jus tertii.

A trustee, who has acknowledged himself as such, must not set up, or aid, the adverse title of a third party against his beneficiary (m). But (semble) he may decline to execute the trust, if he receives information making it doubtful whether he ought to execute it; and he has a right to have the direction of the court on the subject (n).

Still later, the surviving trustees were induced (not knowing the real object) to appoint new trustees, and vest the property in them. Immediately afterwards, the new trustees—who were in

2. Nor, however honestly trustees may believe that the trust property belongs of right to a third party, are they justified in refusing to perform the trust they have once undertaken, or in communicating with such other person on the subject; but they must assume the validity of the title of their beneficiaries until it be negated (o). Must not contest the title of their beneficiaries.

3. Where, however, trustees have received notice of a paramount claim, and of the intention of the notifying party to hold them responsible if they deal with the fund in a manner contrary to such paramount claim, it is not yet authoritatively settled whether, in face of such notice, the trustees are bound to go on steadily in executing the trust which they have undertaken, or whether they can apply to the court for relief. In Neale v. Davis (p), it was held by WOOD, V.-C., and TURNER, L.J. (KNIGHT-BRUCE, L.J., dissentiente), that the trustees were entitled to refuse to execute the trust under such circumstances, and had a right to come to the court for its direction. Lord Justice KNIGHT-BRUCE, however, energetically dissented, saying: "I am of opinion that it is not competent in law, equity, or honesty, for men so to act. I am of opinion that if, by paying the fund to their cestuis que trusts they would make themselves personally liable to the adverse claimant in the event of his being successful, they were and are bound to perform the trust which they undertook" (q). The doctrine as enunciated in the rule, however, is, it is apprehended, correct, and is certainly in accordance with modern practice, and is probably justified by Order 55, r. 3 (g), of the Rules of They may appeal to court to relieve them of the trust.

- (c) where the trust is before the court, and the trustee has, before accepting the trust, expressly stipulated for remuneration (y) ;

ILLUSTRATIONS.

1. Thus, a trustee who is a solicitor will not be allowed to charge for his time and trouble, nor for his professional attendance; for, as was somewhat dryly said by Lord LYNDHURST, in New v. Jones (b), "A trustee placed in the position of a solicitor might, if allowed to perform the duties of a solicitor, and to be paid for them, find it very often proper to institute and carry on legal proceedings which he would not do if he were to derive no emolument from them himself, and if he were to employ another person." The incapacity not only applies to the solicitor-trustee personally, but also to his firm, who cannot, by acting as his solicitors, charge profit costs, either in an action, or for preparing leases and the like on behalf of the trust estate (c).

2. But if the settlement provides that the trustee may charge, he will be allowed to do so, although his charges will be strictly limited to those indicated by the settlor. Thus, if a solicitor-trustee is authorised to make professional charges, he will not be allowed to charge for time and trouble expended other than in his position as solicitor (d). But, on the other hand, where a will authorises any trustee, thereof who may be a solicitor to make the usual professional, or other proper and reasonable charges, for all business done and time expended in relation to the trusts of the will, whether such business is usually within the business of a solicitor or not, the taxing master has power to allow to a trustee who is a solicitor, the proper charges for business not strictly of a professional nature transacted by him in relation to the trust estate (e), but not for work altogether outside his professional avocations (f). this holds good even where a legacy is given to the solicitor-trustee conditionally upon his accepting the trust (g). However, in all such cases, the trustees cannot, in the absence of special powers, settle the amount payable to the solicitor-trustee so as to bind the beneficiaries, and the latter are consequently entitled to have the solicitor's costs investigated (g); and it is the duty of the solicitor-trustee to inform them of their right to tax his bill (h).

Exception where solicitor acts for self and another.

3. There is a curious exception to the rule that a solicitor-trustee cannot, in the absence of an enabling clause, charge profit costs. This exception (known as the rule in Craddock v. Piper (i)) is, that "where there is work done in court, not on behalf of the trustee who is a solicitor alone, but on behalf of himself and a co-trustee, the ordinary principle will not prevent the solicitor, or his firm, from receiving the usual costs, if the costs of appearing for, or acting for, the two, have not increased the expense; that is to say, if the trustee himself has not added to the expense which would have been incurred if he or his firm had appeared only for his co-trustee" (k). The exception in Craddock v. Piper is, however, limited to the costs incurred in respect of business done in an action or matter, and does not apply to business done out of court (k); and where a solicitor-trustee is acting for the trust estate, he will not be allowed to make profit costs merely on the ground that a third party (e.g., a lessee or mortgagor) has to repay the costs to the trust estate (l).

Cannot generally claim a salary.

4. In general, a trustee, whether express or constructive, will not be permitted to claim a salary or any remuneration for managing a trade or business (m). Thus, in Barrett v. Hartley (n), where a trustee had carried on a business for six years, in consequence whereof great advantage had accrued to his beneficiaries, it was held that he had no right to exact or charge any remuneration or bonus in respect of such services; for his exertions were incident to the performance of the duties imposed by the deed of trust which he had accepted. Art. 45.

5. There is authority for saying that this does not apply Exception. to one who rightfully becomes possessed of another's money and rightfully trades with it; and that he will be entitled to a reasonable remuneration, although he is of course a constructive trustee of the profits of the trade (o). For instance, in Brown v. Litton (p) the plaintiff's testator was the captain of a ship, who, being on a voyage, had 800 dollars which he intended to invest in trade. The captain died, and the defendant, who was the mate of the ship, becoming captain in his place, took possession of these 800 dollars, and by judiciously trading with them made considerable profits. Upon a bill being filed against him for an account, the Lord Keeper HARCOURT ordered that. "To recompense him for his care in trading with it, the master shall settle a proper salary for the pains and trouble he has been at in the management thereof."

1. Thus, a trustee must not actively import trust moneys into his trade or business, or use them in speculations of his own; and if he does so (as has been said before) he will be a constructive trustee of the profits; and if there be no profits he will be liable for the breach of trust, and will have to pay compound interest at five per cent., as will be seen hereafter (b). Where, however, there has been no active breach of trust, but only an omission on the part of a trustee, in whose business the settlor had money invested, to settle up the accounts and properly invest the balance, such an omission will not make him liable to account for the profits (c).

Must not trade with trust fund.

2. On similar principles, a trustee of leaseholds cannot use his position for the purpose of getting a new lease granted to himself on the expiration of the term of which he is trustee (d). And this principle has been carried so high, that where a trustee of a lease endeavoured fairly and honestly to treat for a renewal on account of the beneficiaries, and, the lessor positively refusing to grant a renewal for their benefit, the trustee took the lease for himself, it was held that even in such a case it was incumbent on the trustee to hold the renewed lease for the benefit of the beneficiaries (e).

Must not get lease renewed to himself.

costs, Mr. Justice NORTH (while holding that in the administration action he had no jurisdiction in the matter) intimated that if a separate action were brought against the trustee by the beneficiaries to make him hand over the sum so received, he would have no defence (f). Of course, a bribe paid to the trustee to induce him to lease or sell the trust property, altogether invalidates the transaction (g).

Accretion to trustee's estate belongs to trust.

4. Where trust moneys were lent on mortgage, and the mortgagor being a person of eccentric character, devised the equity of redemption to "the mortgagee," it was held, that, although the mortgagor did not know that the mortgagee was a trustee, yet, as the devise was made to him as mortgagee, and as it was the trust which caused him to occupy that position, the devise of the equity of redemption belonged to the trust, and not to the trustee beneficially (h).

Must not sport over trust estate.

5. Lord ELDON once directed an inquiry whether the right of sporting over the trust property could be let for the benefit of the beneficiaries, and, if not, he thought that the game should belong to the heir of the settlor. The trustee might appoint a gamekeeper, if necessary, for the preservation of the game, but must not keep an establishment of mere pleasure for his own enjoyment (i).

Rule does not apply to indirect gains.

6. The rule does not, however, apply where a trustee remotely, and only incidentally, profits by his connection with the trust; as, for instance, where a trustee who is a solicitor lends trust moneys on mortgage to one of his own clients, and thereby obtains a fee from the latter for preparing the security (k). Nevertheless, it has been held that an advance made by a trustee to one of his beneficiaries under a power of advancement, made in order to enable that beneficiary to repay a debt due from him to the trustee, was a breach of trust (l). But where there is no such stipulation it would be otherwise (m). Art. 46.

7. The rule does not apply where the trustee is also the ultimate beneficiary subject to setting aside a specific sum for another. For although in form a trustee, he is substantially beneficial owner, subject to an equitable mortgage for securing the specific sum in question (n). Rule inapplicable where trustee is the beneficiary subject to specific charge.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF PARAGRAPH (2).

1. Perhaps the most important branch of the subject is that relating to the purchase or lease by trustees of the trust property. With regard to such purchases from themselves (as distinguished from purchases from their beneficiaries), the doctrine stands much more upon general principle than upon the circumstances of any individual case. It rests upon this: that the purchase is not permitted in any case, however honest the circumstances, the general interests of justice requiring it to be destroyed in every instance, as no court is equal to the examination and ascertainment of the truth in much the greater number of cases (o). Consequently, under no circumstances can an active trustee, nor, indeed, a passive trustee who has been an active one, nor even a person who has been erroneously treated by all parties as a trustee (p) (i.e., a trustee de son tort), purchase trust property from himself or his colleagues, either directly or collusively through the intervention of a third party (q). Such a transaction is voidable at the instance of a beneficiary ex debito justitiæ, and without proof of any injury or loss, and the purchaser will also have to repay the rents but without interest (r), a fact which ought to be borne in mind by every trustee. Such a sale also affects all subsequent purchasers with notice, from the trustee (s) ; and, therefore, even if a trustee cares to risk such a purchase as between himself and the beneficiaries, he should remember that it practically precludes him from ever parting with the property to a subsequent purchaser. However, this rule does not prevent a trustee selling to a joint stock company in which he is a mere shareholder as distinguished from a "one man company" (t) ; for a sale by a person to a corporation of which he is a member is not, either in form or substance, a sale by him to himself and others. Nevertheless, in such a case, there is such a conflict of interest and duty, that if the sale be impeached by the beneficiaries, the onus will lie on the company to show affirmatively that the trustee had taken all reasonable pains to secure a purchaser at the best price, and that the price given by the company was not inadequate at the time, although a better price might have been obtained by waiting (u). It must also be observed that the fact that a trustee has sold trust property in the hope, subsequently realised, of being able to repurchase it for himself at a future time, is not of itself a sufficient ground for setting aside the sale, where the price was not inadequate at the time, and there was no agreement or understanding existing at the time at the first sale that the purchaser should sell or reconvey the property to the trustee ; and the fact that the trustee many years afterwards made a handsome profit by the property makes no difference (v). However, in the case just cited, over twenty years had elapsed without the sale being impeached, and many of the parties were dead ; and, as the court said, the presumption of law that a transaction was legal and honest is a presumption that is strengthened by lapse of time. In a recent case it has been held that a trustee cannot adopt for his own benefit an executory contract to purchase from himself as trustee (x).

2. An agent employed for the sale of an estate cannot purchase it for himself or another (y), for he is a constructive trustee (z). Art. 46.

Same rule applies to agents.

3. So trustees cannot lease or mortgage the trust estate to one of themselves, and if they do so the lessee will have to account for the profits (a). Cannot lease or mortgage to himself.

4. But where there are infant beneficiaries or beneficiaries not in esse, the court will, on the application of the trustee, allow him to purchase, if it can see that, under the circumstances, it is clearly for the benefit of the beneficiaries, but not otherwise (b). The best course of procedure in such an application is to issue a summons under R. S. C. 1883, Order LV., r. 3, asking for an inquiry whether it is for the benefit of the infant beneficiaries that the trustee should be permitted to purchase for a certain sum. If the master certifies that it is, the order will be made as a matter of course. In one case in which the present writer was counsel (c), Mr. Justice PEARSON ordered the costs of the action to be paid out of the trust estate, on the ground that it was for the infant's benefit, the trustee offering more than the market price; and it is conceived that the course followed by his lordship was correct. Purchase by trustee by leave of the court.

5. The rule as to selling to himself only applies where the express or constructive trustee is substantially an active trustee; for where he is the mere depository of the legal estate without any duties, and without ever having had any, he may be a purchaser; for instance, where he is a trustee to preserve contingent remainders (d), or a person nominated trustee but has disclaimed (e). But one who was originally an executive trustee, and has become a mere bare trustee by Rule inapplicable to bare trustees.

1. But although a trustee is incapable of purchasing from himself or his colleagues, there is no fixed and arbitrary rule that the trustee can, under no circumstances, purchase the interests of his beneficiaries from the beneficiaries themselves. Yet even in such cases the court regards such purchases with great jealousy, and, if impeached, they cannot stand unless the trustee can affirmatively and clearly show that the parties were completely at arm's length in making the bargain, that the bargain was a beneficial one to the cestuis que trusts, and that the trustee candidly disclosed all facts known to him which could in any way influence the vendors (g).

2. In reference to sales by the beneficiaries, the transaction was upheld where a beneficiary took the whole management of a sale upon himself, and then agreed to sell a lot, which he had bought in, to one of the trustees for sale (h).

Whether

3. A question sometimes arises in practice, whether, on a sale by trustees, the property can be purchased beneficially by a person who is a trustee of a subsidiary settlement by which a share in the proceeds of the sale is settled. Curiously enough, this point seems never to have been decided; but it is submitted that such a purchase might be impeached. For it is the duty of the subsidiary trustee to watch over the interests of his beneficiaries. It is obviously to their interest that the sale shall realise a high price, whereas it is the interest of a purchaser that it shall be sold cheap. By becoming a purchaser, therefore, the subsidiary trustee is acting in a character wholly inconsistent with his fiduciary duty, and little doubt is entertained that, if the sale were impeached by his cestuis que trusts, the onus would be cast on him of proving his complete bona fides, and that he gave an adequate price. Art. 46.

4. Although a trustee cannot purchase from himself, it has been held that the rule does not preclude the trustees of his marriage settlement from purchasing the property (i). Trustee of trustee's settlement not debarred from purchasing.

5. A trustee may take a fair mortgage from his beneficiary; and, in that case, may rely on his possession of the legal estate, as giving him priority over prior mortgagees of whose claims he had no notice when he made the advance (k). Mortgage by beneficiary to trustee.

6. So, where a client was very desirous of selling property, and, after vainly endeavouring to do so, finally sold it to his solicitor (who was of course a constructive trustee), and it was proved that the transaction was fair and the price adequate, and indeed more than could have been obtained elsewhere at the time, and the client quite understood his position, it was held that such a sale was good and binding, although it lay upon the solicitor to prove that it was unimpeachable (l). A solicitor purchasing from his client should always make him employ a separate solicitor (m). The rule equally applies where the solicitor purchases, not directly from the client, but from the latter's trustee in bankruptcy (n). Purchase by solicitor from client.

7. The rule applies even where the party from whom advice is sought is not a professional adviser; for the fact that he accepts the position of adviser places him in a fiduciary position towards the party seeking advice (o). Purchase by person occupying a position of confidence towards vendor.

Art. 46.

The rule does not apply to certain constructive trustees.

8. The rule as to the extreme fairness to be observed in purchasing from cestuis que trusts does not apply to persons who are only constructive trustees by virtue of some business contract entered into with the so-called cestuis que trusts. Thus mortgagees can freely purchase from their mortgagors (p), partners from the representatives of a deceased partner (q), and other persons bearing analogous relations enjoy a similar freedom; for though contracting parties may by a metaphor be said to be trustees for each other, the trust is strictly limited by the contract. They are trustees only to the extent of their obligation to perform that contract, and the trust is limited to the discharge of that obligation (r).

ART. 47.—Duty of Trustee to be ready with his Accounts.

(1) A trustee must:—

(a) keep clear and accurate accounts of the trust property (s); and

(b) at all reasonable times, at the request of a beneficiary, give him full and accurate information as to the amount and state of the trust property (t), and permit him or his solicitor (u) to inspect the accounts and vouchers, and other documents relating to the trust (x).

ILLUSTRATIONS OF PARAGRAPH (1).

1. The estate of a testator, who died in 1832, was distributed in 1847, as the evidence showed, at the written request of the persons beneficially entitled. Another part of the estate, which fell in in 1852, was distributed, also at the request of the beneficiaries, and in 1871 the acting trustee died. No accounts or vouchers were forthcoming from the trustees. A bill filed in 1872 by one of the beneficiaries against the surviving trustee for administration, was dismissed; but owing to the breach of duty committed by the trustees in not keeping accounts and vouchers, the surviving trustee had to bear his own costs (a). If, however, the action had been successful, the trustee would in all probability have had to pay the plaintiff's costs as well (b) up to the hearing (c). But, as the reason of this is that such costs are caused by the trustees' neglect to keep and furnish accounts, the plaintiff will not in general be entitled to costs against the trustee beyond the time when the account is actually rendered, or ordered by the court to be rendered, from which time, if the accounts are substantially accurate, the trustee will be entitled to his costs out of the estate (d), or, if the plaintiff sues alone, out of his share in the estate (e). It is no defence that the trustees are illiterate and incapable of keeping accounts; for in that case they would be justified by necessity in employing, and be bound in point of law to employ, a competent agent to keep the accounts for them (f). Failure to keep accounts.

2. The importance of keeping accounts is shown by the fact, that although the court will generally saddle with costs a trustee whose only fault is that he has failed to do so, yet where a trustee has kept and furnished accounts, which, by an honest mistake, turn out to be inaccurate, and show an erroneous balance in the trustee's favour, he will be allowed his costs, for he will not have been guilty of any breach of duty, but only of a bonâ fide mistake (i).

Supplying

3. "A trustee is bound to give his cestui que trust proper information as to the investment of the trust estate (h); and where the trust estate is invested on mortgage, it is not sufficient for the trustee merely to say, 'I have invested the trust money on mortgage,' but he must produce the mortgage deeds, so that the cestui que trust may thereby ascertain that the trustee's statement is correct, and that the trust estate is so invested. . . . Where a portion of the trust estate is invested in consols, it is not sufficient for the trustee to say that it is so invested, but his cestui que trust is entitled to an authority from the trustee to enable him to make proper application to the bank in order that he may verify the trustee's own statement; there may be stock standing in the name of a person who admits he is a trustee of it, which at the same time is incumbered; some other person having a paramount title may have obtained a charging order on the stock, or placed a distringas upon it" (k). fund has been dealt with, and where it is, yet it is no part of the duty of a trustee to tell his cestui que trust what incumbrances the latter has created, nor which of his incumbrancers have given notice of their respective charges. It is no part of the duty of a trustee to assist his cestui que trust in selling or mortgaging his beneficial interest, and in squandering or anticipating his fortune; and it is clear that a person who proposes to buy or lend money on it, has no greater rights than the cestui que trust himself (l). If, however, the trustee has notice of an incumbrance, and represents to a proposed purchaser or mortgagee that he has no such notice, he will be liable (m).

ILLUSTRATION OF PARAGRAPH (2).

As above stated a beneficiary is entitled, either personally or by his solicitor, to inspect the trust accounts and documents, but if he requires a copy of an account or document, he must pay the necessary expense himself; for it is not fair that it should be saddled on the trust estate, nor of course can the trustee be expected to incur the expense personally (n). On the same ground, where a beneficiary demands information as to his rights under the settlement which cannot be furnished by the trustee without the assistance of a solicitor, the trustee is not bound to incur that expense (or if he be himself a solicitor with power to charge, he is not bound to incur the loss of time), unless the beneficiary is willing to pay the costs of complying with his requisition (o).

(1) A trustee may—

- (a) exercise all powers expressly (b) confided to him by the settlement; and

1. The leading case of Gisborne v. Gisborne (h), is the best Discretionary example of the right of trustees to exercise a discretion powers. expressly given to them by the settlement. There a testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees upon various trusts, one of which was, that "my said trustees, in their discretion and of their uncontrollable authority, pay and apply the whole, or such portion only, of the annual income of my real and personal estate as they shall think expedient, to and for the clothing, board, etc., and for the personal and peculiar benefit and comfort, of my dear wife." The wife also had property of her own, and was a lunatic, and one of the trustees was the residuary legatee under the testator's will. Under these circumstances, the trustees, bonâ fide (as the court found) refused to permit the whole income of the trust fund to be applied for the wife's support in the asylum, and proposed to allow only so much for that purpose as would be sufficient, after taking into account the income of the wife's own property. The House of Lords, on these facts, held that the trustees had an absolute discretion in the application of the fund, and that so long as they exercised that discretion bond fide, the court could not interfere with them; although if no such discretion had existed, the court would have ordered the trust fund to have been applied primarily in the support of the lunatic (i). So, too, where absolute discretion has been given to trustees to do a particular act (e.g., to sell the trust property), the court cannot compel them to exercise the power; but if they do exercise it, the court will see that they do not exercise it improperly or unreasonably (k).

Discretion sometimes limited to time and manner.

2. The practitioner must, however, carefully scrutinize the words conferring the authority and discretion, and must not assume that a discretion as to the mode of applying a fund for a person's benefit, gives trustees a discretion as to how much of the fund is to be so applied. Thus, in Re Weaver (l) the trustees were directed to pay the income of the trust property, at such time and in such manner as the trustees should think fit, towards the maintenance of a lunatic during her life, with power to invest any surplus, not required for the purpose, as capital. The Court of Appeal, held, however, that the trustees had only a discretion as to the time and manner of the application.

Powers in the nature of trusts.

3. A careful distinction must also be made between true discretionary powers and powers which, although discretionary in form, are really coupled with a duty. For instance, where a testator devises real estates to trustees, in trust to manage them during the minority of an infant, with power to lease in their discretion, the trustees will not be allowed to decline to exercise the power of letting. For, as BOWEN, L.J., said in Re Courtier, Coles v. Courtier (m), "one can understand that, where the machinery for management of the estates is given to the trustees, and the court undertakes to enforce the trusts for management, it is right for it to compel the trustees to utilize the machinery entrusted to them." In fact, the court looks at the substance rather than the form; and where what appears to be a mere discretionary power is, in reality, part of a trust for management, the court will make the language bend to the implied intention, and order the trustees to exercise the power (n).

Art. 48.

4. With regard to the principles enunciated in sub-clause (b) (in relation to the unexpressed authority of a trustee), the case of Ward v. Ward (o) may be cited. There, by the immediate realisation of the trust property, the trustee would have ruined one beneficiary from whom a large debt was due to the trust estate, and would have very seriously prejudiced others. Instead of doing so, the trustee made an arrangement with the debtor for payment of the money by instalments; and it was held that he was justified in taking that course, because he had exercised a sound discretion, and such as the court would have approved. But no practitioner should venture to advise a trustee to take upon himself the risk of adopting such a course. In all such cases a trustee should apply for the sanction of the court, under the provisions of Order LV., r. 3.

Implied discretionary powers.

5. So, again, as was said by Lord COTTENHAM in Bright v. North (p), "Every trustee is entitled to be allowed the reasonable and proper expenses incurred in protecting property committed to his care. But if they have a right to protect property from immediate and direct injury, they must have the same right where the injury threatened is indirect but probable;" and, therefore, his lordship allowed the trustees (who were, in that instance, trustees of public works) the expenses of opposing a bill in Parliament which would have been prejudicial to those works if passed. Here again, however, trustees should always be advised to obtain the sanction of the court before incurring such serious expense, under s. 36 of the Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38).

Power to take necessary steps for keeping property in repair.

6. On the same grounds, a trustee whose duty it is to keep property, forming part of the trust estate, in repair, may, it would seem, retain income for that purpose, but without prejudice to the ultimate rights of the tenant for life and remainderman inter se (g).

Power to exchange policy for a fully paid up one.

7. On similar grounds, it would seem that a trustee may surrender a policy of assurance forming part of the trust property, in exchange for a fully paid up one of less amount, in cases where the party liable to pay the premiums cannot possibly do so (r). But of course no sane lawyer would allow a trustee who was his client to do this without the sanction of the court.

Power to thin timber.

8. So, again, in cases where the court would, if applied to, authorise the cutting down of timber which has arrived at maturity, and which would only degenerate if allowed to stand, or where it is necessary to cut it for the purpose of thinning it, the trustee may fell it on his own authority (s).

Power to grant certain leases.

9. On the same principle, a trustee who has the management of property, may grant a reasonable agricultural lease (t), unless expressly or impliedly (u) restrained from doing so by the settlement. But he may not grant a mining lease, for that would benefit the tenant for life at the expense of the reversioner (x). Moreover, where there is a tenant for life, his consent would now be necessary under s. 56 of the Settled Land Act, 1882.

10. In a recent case, KEKEWICH, J., held that a power to make outlays in repairs or improvements, etc., out of income or capital, impliedly authorised the trustees to mortgage the property for the purpose of raising the necessary money out of capital (y). Art. 48.
Sometimes power to mortgage.

11. On the other hand, trustees must not do acts, however beneficial they may possibly be to the property, if they are in their nature unreasonable and problematical. For instance, they ought not to make merely ornamental improvements (z), nor take down a mansion-house for the purpose of rebuilding a better one (a), nor build a villa for the mere improvement of the estate (b). If, however, they are by the settlement expressly given a power "generally to superintend the management of the estate," it would seem that their powers of management are almost unlimited, so long as they are exercised bonâ fide (c). Trustees are also empowered to carry out certain specified improvements by the Improvement of Land Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 114); but practically these have been superseded by the corresponding powers given to the tenant for life by the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890. No power to make problematical or speculative improvements.

12. With regard to acts for the benefit of the beneficiaries, a familiar instance occurs in the case of trusts of personalty for married women, where, if the trustee paid over the fund to the husband, the wife would probably get no benefit from it. In such case the trustee is justified, if he thinks fit, in refusing to pay the money to the husband, and in paying it into court instead, so that the wife may have every facility for enforcing her equity to a settlement (d). But this right has, it is apprehended, ceased in the case of property coming under the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75). Power to retain married women's trust funds to enable them to claim equity to a settlement.

allow maintenance to

13. So, trustees might always allow, by way of maintenance, a competent part of the income of property to the father of an infant beneficiary (e), where the father could not support it according to its position (f), even where there was a trust for accumulation (g), if the circumstances showed that the settlor looked on the infant as his heir (h); and, if the infant were an orphan, maintenance might be allowed to the mother (i), or stepfather (k), whether they could support it or not. And now, as will be seen under Article 52 (infra, p. 269), the powers of trustees in relation to the maintenance of infants are greatly enlarged. It has been also held that a trustee may under special circumstances, as, for instance, where the capital is considerably under a thousand pounds (l), allow maintenance out of the capital; but a trustee would be very ill-advised to take upon himself the responsibility of doing so (m).

advance.

14. Upon the same principle, a trustee may apply part of an infant's capital for its advancement in the world (n). But here, again (in the absence of express power), he would be undertaking an unnecessary risk in acting without the sanction of the court.

Secus where

15. But where, by making an advancement, the trustee would injure the contingent rights of another beneficiary, he will do it at his peril as against the latter (o). For instance, where £100 was bequeathed upon trust to apply the income towards the maintenance and education of A.

during his minority, and upon trust to pay the corpus to him on attaining twenty-one, but in case of his dying before that age, upon trust for X., it was held that, as against X., the trustees had no authority to advance part of the capital to A., who died before attaining his majority (p).

ILLUSTRATIONS OF PARAGRAPH (2).

1. For illustrations of the principle that a trustee must not exercise his powers so as to unduly benefit one beneficiary at the expense of others, the reader is referred to Article 35, p. 160, supra. But, as pointed out there, it bends to a plainly expressed intention on the part of the settlor to the contrary.

2. With regard to the principle that the court in general cannot interfere with legal interests, it is apprehended that a trustee for another for life only (the trustee merely taking an estate pur autre vie), would not be justified, without the consent of the legal remainderman, in cutting timber which had arrived at maturity, inasmuch as, not being the trustee for the remainderman, he could not do acts for the benefit of the estate generally which would be in derogation of the latter's legal rights (q); nor could he invest the proceeds so as to equitably arrange the benefit between the tenant for life and the remainderman.

to interfere with legal remainders

3. On the same principle, it would seem, that although, where the whole legal estate is in trustees, the court can authorise them to mortgage the trust property for the purpose of raising money to carry out necessary repairs (r), yet, on the other hand, where the legal estate is not in the trustees, but in an infant tenant for life, the court has no jurisdiction to do so (s).

ART. 49.—Power of Trustees in relation to the conduct of Sales.

(1) Where a trust for sale is vested in trustees they may carry out the sale as follows:—

- (a) In such manner, and either alone or jointly with any adjoining or any co-owner, as (having regard to the nature of the property, the title, and all the surrounding circumstances) may be reasonable and for the probable benefit of the beneficiaries (t). But, unless the trust was created by a settlement coming into operation after 27th August, 1860 (u), they cannot buy in the property at an auction (x), or, semble, rescind a contract for sale.
- (b) If the trust was created by a settlement coming into operation on or after the 1st of January, 1882, then (unless forbidden by the settlement) they may sell subject to prior charges or not, and may concur with any other person in selling, without the necessity of making inquiries as to whether the course adopted is the best under all the circumstances (y).
- (c) By leave of the court (but not otherwise) they may sell the surface, reserving the minerals, with incidental powers of working the same (z).

ILLUSTRATIONS OF PARAGRAPH (1).

1. For an example of the law relating to old settlements, the case of Re Cooper and Allen (c) may be cited. The question in that case was whether persons who were mortgagees of a life estate, and also mortgagees (for a different sum) of the reversion, with power of sale under both mortgages, could sell the fee simple in possession. The late Sir GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in giving judgment, said: "First of all, on principle, what is the duty of trustees for sale? It is their duty to sell the estate to the best advantage they can, that is, in the manner most beneficial to the cestuis que trust. It is, further, their duty to take care to receive the purchase-money, and to invest it properly according to the trusts. If, therefore, the sale of the property can be effected at a higher price by joining with somebody else, so far from that being a breach of that principle, they are only carrying out their trusts, and performing their duty in so obtaining that higher price. . . . Secondly, it is their duty, as I have already said, to receive the purchase-money. If, therefore, they do join with any other person, whether that other person be a trustee himself or be a beneficial owner, they must take care that their share of the purchase-money is paid to them, and the purchaser must take care of that likewise, because he can only pay trust money to the trustees. Therefore, where they do join with other people,

Power to sell under the old law independent of statute.

(a) But a depreciatory condition does not now avoid the sale unless it appears that the price was thereby rendered inadequate, nor can the sale be impeached after conveyance on that ground unless the purchaser and trustee were acting collusively; nor can a purchaser now make any objection to a title on the ground that a condition of sale was unnecessarily restrictive. See Trustee Act, 1893, ss. 14, 15, and supra, p. 194.

(c) 4 Ch. D. 802.

Art. 49.

the purchase-money must be so apportioned before the completion of the purchase, and must be paid by the purchaser; the apportioned part coming to the trustees being paid to them." His lordship then proceeded to point out that the trustees were the proper persons to make the apportionment, and that unless a purchaser has notice that the apportionment is an improper one, he would be quite safe in accepting the trustees' apportionment. He then examined the cases in which the joinder with other parties was prima facie right and when it required evidence to support it; pointing out that in the case of adjacent properties, as a general rule, trustees should not agree to a joint sale without some evidence of its desirability, but that in the case of trustees entitled only to a limited or partial estate in property, it is obviously, and without the necessity of proof, for the benefit of the estate that they should join in a sale of the entire fee simple with the other parties interested.

buy in at a sale by auction.

2. As an instance of the inability of trustees under old settlements to buy in the property at an auction, may be mentioned a case in which the assignees of a bankrupt had bought in two lots of the bankrupt's property, and upon the subsequent sale of the two lots, had gained on one, and lost on the other. It was held by Lord ELDON, that the original buying in of the two lots being a breach of trust, the assignees were liable for the loss (if any) on each lot, and could not set off the gain on one against the loss on the other (d).

ART. 50.—Power of Trustees to give Receipts.

"The receipt in writing of any trustee for any money, securities, or other personal property or effects payable, transferable, or deliverable to him under any trust or power will effectually exonerate the person paying, transferring, or delivering the same from seeing to the application or being answerable for any loss or misapplication thereof" (e).

Art. 50.

The above rule is comparatively modern, dating only from 1881, when it formed s. 36 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act of that year. It applies, however, quite irrespective of the date of the settlement, and consequently no questions of practical interest can arise under the old law, which is therefore omitted in this Edition.

ART. 51.—Power to compound and to settle Disputes.

" (1) An executor or administrator may pay or allow any debt or claim on any evidence that he thinks sufficient" (f).

" (2) An executor or administrator, or two or more trustees, acting together, or a sole acting trustee where by the instrument, if any, creating the trust a sole trustee is authorized to execute the trusts and powers thereof, may, if and as he or they may think fit, accept any composition or any security, real or personal, for any debt or for any property, real or personal, claimed, and may allow any time for payment for any debt, and may compromise, compound, abandon, submit to arbitration, or otherwise settle any debt, account, claim, or thing whatever relating to the testator's or intestate's estate or to the trust, and for any of those purposes may enter into, give, execute, and do such agreements, instruments of composition or arrangement, releases, and other things as to him or them seem expedient, without being responsible for any loss occasioned by any act or thing so done by him or them in good faith" (g).

"(3) This section applies only if and as far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the instrument, if any, creating the trust, and shall have effect subject to the terms of that instrument, and to the provisions therein contained" (h).

The above article constitutes the first three sub-sections of s. 21 of the Trustee Act, 1893, which is merely a re-enactment of s. 37 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881. What the effect of the section may be is by no means clear. In Re Owens (i), the late Sir GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., intimated that the probable effect of it was to "revolutionize the law on the subject," and to make the question in every case one entirely of good faith, quite apart from any question of prudence. On the other hand, it has been suggested that the section is merely a statutory expression of the law of the court (k), with this important difference, that it "shifts the onus of proof, where any particular transaction is impeached, from the trustee to the cestui que trust. Formerly a trustee had to justify his action in compromising, compounding, etc.; henceforth the dissatisfied cestuis que trust must prove impropriety of motive" (l). However, in a recent case, Lord Justice LOPES laid it down broadly, that the only excuse for not taking action to enforce payment of a debt due to the trust, is, "a well founded belief on the trustee's part, that such action would be useless, and that the burden of proving the grounds of such well founded belief is on the trustee" (m). If this be indeed so, it is difficult to give any meaning whatever to the section ; but it is only fair to add that the section was not drawn to the attention of the court when the Lord Justice made the above-quoted observations, and that very probably it would not have been applicable to that case (n).

Although the wording of the Act is open to criticism, it must (it is conceived) be construed to mean that the power is to be exercised by not less than two trustees, unless a sole trustee is expressly authorised to execute the trusts, and cannot be construed (as doubtfully suggested by the learned authors above quoted) to enable any two of a greater number of trustees to compromise or compound without the joinder of their fellows.

ART. 52.—Power to allow Maintenance to Infants.

(1) Where property is held in trust for an infant for life or for any greater interest, and whether absolutely or contingently on his attaining the age of twenty-one years, or on the occurrence of any event before his attaining that age, the trustees may, in their discretion, make an allowance for his maintenance, education, or otherwise for his benefit, whether there be any other fund applicable to the same purpose, or any person bound by law to provide for such maintenance and education or not, and may pay it to the guardian or parent (o) of the infant instead of expending it directly themselves (p).

Art. 52.

(2) But the above power only applies to contingent interests—

- (a) where the intermediate income goes along with the corpus (q) ; or
- (b) in case of portions charged on land (r).

Cases to which the power applies.

1. Although the statute allows maintenance out of the income of a contingent legacy or fund, yet if, on the true construction of the settlement, that income is payable to someone else during the infancy, and is not to be accumulated so as to pass along with the corpus if and when it vests, the infant will not (with the exception hereinafter referred to of portions charged on land) be entitled to be maintained. For if he were, his maintenance would come, not out of his own contingent property, but out of somebody else's income, which would be manifestly unjust. Consequently the first question which the practitioner has to solve in all cases of maintenance (except as aforesaid) is, whether or not the income of the fund will go along with the capital, if and when the latter vests in the infant. If it will, then maintenance may be safely allowed. If it will not, then maintenance must be refused.

Whether the gift comprises intermediate income is a question of construction.

2. The question is not so much a question of law as one of the interpretation of the settlement. Still, it may be useful to sum up the decisions so far as they afford any principle or rule of construction. It would seem, then, that a general residuary but contingent bequest of personal estate includes the intermediate income (s) ; that a similar devise of real estate does not (t); but that a blended gift of both real and personal estate prima facie includes the intermediate income of both (u). On the other hand, a general or specific legacy or devise does not carry the intermediate income unless (1) the donor stands in loco parentis to the infant, and has provided no other fund for maintenance (x); (2) the income is expressly directed to be applied for maintenance, or (3) the gift is expressly or impliedly directed to be at once set apart (y). Art. 52.

3. There is, however, an exception to the general rule with regard to portions charged on land. Although such gifts do not vest until they are wanted, viz., in case of sons at twenty-one, or in case of daughters at twenty-one or marriage, and do not carry intermediate income, yet an infant contingent portioner is entitled to such a rate of interest or allowance in respect of his or her portion as the court may deem necessary for maintenance (z). Portions charged on land.

4. It may be added that a gift of residue to an infant makes the executor a trustee, and enables him to allow maintenance under this article (a). Residuary gift to infant.

of the fact that at the time of the payment or act the person who gave the power of attorney was dead or had done some act to avoid the power. But this does not affect the right of any person entitled to the money against the person to whom the payment is made, and the person so entitled has the same remedy against the person to whom the payment is made as he would have had against the trustee (b).

The above article, although restricted in terms to trustees, is but little more than the general law now applicable to all persons acting upon the faith of a power of attorney, inasmuch as s. 47 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, gives protection to every person so acting, notwithstanding that before the payment or act the donor of the power had died, or become lunatic or of unsound mind, or bankrupt, or had revoked the power, if the fact of such death, lunacy, unsoundness of mind, or bankruptcy or revocation, was not, at the time of the payment or act, known to the person making or doing the same.

seem that, although a trustee may be personally liable for

3. It may be conveniently mentioned here, that where trustees have paid the trust fund into court under s. 42 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (which re-enacts the Trustee Relief Act), they can no longer exercise any of their powers, discretionary or otherwise. For the payment into court is, in effect, a retirement by the trustees from their office, and a relinquishment of the judgment and discretion confided to them by the settlor (m).

ART. 55.—Power of the Beneficiaries in a Simple Trust.

The beneficiary in a simple trust, who is not under any disability (b), is entitled to have the legal estate vested in him or conveyed as he may direct (a).

ILLUSTRATION.

1. Thus, if property be devised unto and to the use of a trustee in fee simple, upon trust to pay testator's debts and subject thereto, upon trust for testator's widow for life, and after her death upon trust for B. absolutely, B., on the death of the widow and after payment of the debts, will be entitled to call upon the trustee to vest the property absolutely in him. For in equity B. is the sole and absolute owner, and the court will not permit a person, solely and absolutely entitled, to be subjected to the tutelage or interference of a trustee. The court, in fact, regards a trustee as a kind of intermediary or stakeholder, whose office is to hold the scales evenly, and to see that the rights of several persons are mutually respected. But where there is only one person interested, and that person

ART. 56.—Power of the Beneficiaries collectively in a Special Trust.

- Vested interest at twenty-one, but payment deferred until twenty-four.
1. Thus, a testator gave his residuary personal estate to an infant, and directed his executors to place it out at interest to accumulate, and to pay the principal to the infant on his attaining twenty-four, and in the meantime to allow £60 a year for his maintenance; and the testator gave the residue over on the infant's dying under twenty-one. The court held that on the true construction of the will, the infant took an absolute vested and transmissible interest on attaining twenty-one; and that, consequently, being the only person beneficially interested, he could put an end to the trust, and was entitled to have the residue and accumulations at once transferred to him (c). For, as the late Vice-Chancellor PAGE WOOD said, in the case of

(b) I.e., infants, lunatics, and married women, restrained from anticipation. If a married woman who is not so restrained, is yet not entitled for her separate use either by settlement or statute, she can only arrest the trust subject to the provisions of the Fines and Recoveries Abolition Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), and Malins' Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 57). Nor must it be forgotten that the latter statute does not enable such a feme covert to deal with future interests in personal estate coming to her under her marriage settlement.

Gosling v. Gosling (d): "The principle of this court has always been to recognise the right of all persons who attain the age of twenty-one to enter upon the absolute use and enjoyment of the property given to them by a will, notwithstanding any directions by the testator to the effect that they are not to enjoy it until a later age, unless, during the interval, the property is given for the benefit of another. If the property is once theirs, it is useless for the testator to attempt to impose any fetter upon their enjoyment of it in full, so soon as they attain twenty-one."

Art. 56.

2. The above cases must, however, be carefully distinguished from those in which the settlement gives the trustees a discretion to apply the income until the given age for the maintenance of a class of beneficiaries, or any one or more of them to the exclusion of the others. For, in that case, until the youngest member of the class attains the given age, it is impossible to say that any member of the class has an absolute right to the income of his share. Consequently, he is not the only person interested in his share, and cannot call for the payment of it (e).

Otherwise where intermediate interest does not go to same beneficiary.

3. Again, in Re Brown (f) there was a bequest of consols in trust to purchase a life annuity for a lady, to be held for her separate use without power of anticipation; and in case of her illness or incapacity, the testator gave the trustees a discretionary power as to the application of the annuity for her maintenance. The legatee being unmarried, and the restraint on anticipation being therefore nugatory, it was held that she was entitled to a transfer of the consols into her own name (g). A similar result followed even where the testator directed that the annuitant should not be entitled to have the value of his annuity in lieu thereof, Absolute gift to daughters with direction to settle upon themselves at marriage.

4. So, where a testator directed his property to be divided into nine shares, and gave one and a half share to each of his two daughters, "to be settled on themselves at their marriage," it was held by Sir JAMES BACON, V.-C., that, on the true construction of the will (inasmuch as there was no reference to grandchildren, or any intimation of the testator's desire to restrict the gift to a life interest), the daughters took absolutely, and if so, then under the above rule they were entitled to have their shares paid over to them on attaining twenty-one, free from all liability to have the same settled (i). Whether the learned judge's construction of the will was correct may perhaps be respectfully doubted (k). Anyhow, the reader must carefully distinguish the above case from those in which there is a direction to settle on a daughter and her issue (l), where of course she would not be the only person beneficially interested, and consequently would not be entitled to demand the capital.

Direction to sell estate and divide proceeds.

5. On similar principles, where an estate is directed to be sold and the proceeds to be divided among several persons, although no one singly can elect that his own share shall not be disposed of, but shall remain realty (m), yet if all the beneficiaries agree to take the land unconverted, they can put an end to the trust, and insist upon their right to do so (n). But until they do so elect the trust subsists. Where, however, there is no trust for sale, but merely a power of sale, the rule is subject to this modification, viz., that the trust still subsists, and the trustees can still exercise the power after the property has, under the trusts, become absolutely vested in persons who are sui juris, if, on the construction of the settlement, it appears to be the intention of the settlor that it should be then exercised, and provided that the power in its creation was not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities (o). It is apprehended that it follows that, in such a case no one of the beneficiaries can insist upon having his undivided share in the legal estate conveyed to him by the trustees; for that would place it out of the trustees' power to exercise the power of sale confided to them for the benefit of all the beneficiaries.

Art. 56.

6. The above examples deal only with cases in which there was either one beneficiary only, or several entitled as tenants in common or joint tenants. The same principle, however, is equally applicable where the trust is for persons in succession, and they all unanimously desire to put an end to the trust. This branch of the rule (known as the rule in Saunders v. Vautier (p)) is frequently made use of in practice. Thus, if the trust be for A. for life with remainder for his wife B. for life for her separate use, with remainder to X. Y. and Z. absolutely, then A., B., X., Y. and Z. being the only persons beneficially interested, can join together in putting an end to the trust, and calling on the trustees to deal with the property, whether real or personal, as they may direct. Even where it is not absolutely certain that no more beneficiaries can come into existence, but it is morally so (e.g., where the ultimate remainder is in trust for the children of a woman who is past the age of child-bearing) the court will on summons give the trustees liberty to act according to the directions of the beneficiaries in esse so long as the contingent rights of living persons are not prejudiced (q), although it is understood that the court will not in such cases imperatively order the trustees to do so (r).

(r) There is no reported decision as to this, but it is the well known practice.

Art. 56. of the several beneficial interests of all the beneficiaries, can put an end to a trust (say, for sale), and demand a conveyance of the legal estate from the trustees. It is, however, clear on principle that so long as any equity of redemption is in existence (that is to say, until sale or foreclosure) he could not. For while an equity of redemption subsists, the mortgagee is not the sole person beneficially interested in the property, and therefore cannot, under the rule above enunciated, assume absolute dominion over it. No doubt when he has obtained a decree of absolute foreclosure, he could put an end to the trust; and so, if he sold the entire beneficial interest of all the mortgagees, could the purchaser. Moreover, if the mortgage, or all the mortgages (as the case may be), contained powers authorising the mortgagee to stay, or agree with others in staying, the trust, he might, under such powers, do so; but nothing short of a most explicit power would enable him before foreclosure or sale to demand a conveyance of the legal estate (s).

The above view seems to be borne out by the cases of Re Bell, Jeffery v. Sayles (t) and Hockey v. Western (u), in which it was held that a mortgagee of a share in a trust fund, cannot demand to be paid the entire share of his mortgagor, but only his principal, interest, and costs (t).

The interest of a beneficiary (save only in the case of a married woman during her coverture) cannot be made inalienable (z), except by means of a shifting clause giving it over, or practically giving it over, to some other person upon alienation (a), in which case such other person having a contingent interest is also a beneficiary. For instance, a trust to apply income for another's maintenance entitles him to have the income paid to him or to his alienee, even although he be restrained from alienation, for no one in remainder is injured by it (b).

Moreover, it appears that although the trustees would not be justified in paying any part of the income to the life tenant (because it no longer belongs to him but to his alienees or creditors), they would nevertheless be justified in expending it for his benefit (d).

Restraint on alienation by married woman does not prevent her barring an entail.

How far equitable life tenant may claim actual possession.

1. Whatever the law may have been at one time, the court has, since the passing of the Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), exercised much more freely its undoubted discretion as to allowing an equitable life tenant to have actual possession (f). The principles on which the court now acts in such cases are stated in Re Bagot (g). There CHITTY, J., said: "It is clear that Mrs. Bagot (the equitable life tenant) has no right to claim to be let into possession, and she can only claim to be let into possession through the exercise of the judicial discretion. . . . On the point of convenience, it is convenient that the lady and her husband, to the extent to which she may desire to obtain his assistance, should have the management of the property, the income of which she is entitled to receive, and that she should get that income with as little expense in the way of commission for collecting rents, employment of agents, and the like, as is practicable under the circumstances. . . . Therefore, if I were dealing with this case quite apart from the Settled Land Acts, I should consider it a proper exercise of my discretion to let the lady into possession. I am not disposed myself to say that the Settled Land Acts have abrogated the old ones. It really appears to me that the proper expression with regard to the Settled Land Acts, with reference to the doctrine which I am considering is, that the Settled Land Acts afford an additional ground for exercising the discretion favourably to the person who has conferred upon her or him, as tenant for life, by the Settled Land Acts, the extensive powers therein contained." The court therefore ordered that the tenant for life should be let into possession upon giving certain undertakings in the form set forth in the case of Re Wythes (h). In Re Newen, Newen v. Barnes (i), KEKEWICH, J., appears to have considered that an equitable tenant for life is entitled to be let into possession on a proper case being made, but if and so far as he intended to hold that the matter was not discretionary, that view has been dissented from by STIRLING, J. (k).

ART. 58.—Survivorship of the Office and Estate.

Upon the death of a trustee, the office, as well as the estate, survives to the surviving trustees (a); and, notwithstanding that there is a power for the appointment of new trustees (b), the survivors can carry out the trust and exercise all such powers as are necessary for that purpose (c), unless there be something in the settlement which specially manifests an intention to the contrary (d).

personal estate to two persons, their executors and administrators, upon trust, by sale, to raise and invest a certain sum of money and apply the interest as therein directed, and one of the trustees died, and the other proceeded to sell the estate, it was held, on an objection to the title, that the surviving trustee might exercise the power of sale. The Vice-Chancellor said: "The argument proceeds, as it appears to me, on an entire disregard of the distinction between powers and trusts. No doubt where it is a naked power given to two persons, that will not survive to one of them unless there be express words or a necessary implication. . . . When, on the other hand, a testator gives his property, not to one party subject to a power in others, but to trustees upon special trusts, with a direction to carry his purposes into effect, it is the duty of the trustee to execute the trust. If an estate be devised to A. and B. upon trust to sell, and thereby raise such a sum, it is, I think, a novel argument, that after A.'s death B. cannot sell the estate and execute the trust" (e). And now, by s. 22 of the Trustee Act, 1893, it is expressly enacted, that where, in the case of a trust created after December 31st, 1881, a power or trust is given to, or vested in, two or more trustees jointly, then, unless the contrary is expressed in the settlement (if any), the same may be exercised or performed by the survivor or survivors of them for the time being.

Copyholds, however, devolve on the customary heir, unless (semble) they are expressly devised.

(2) The person on whom the trust property devolves can exercise the powers and duties of the trustee, unless it is to be collected from the settlement that the office was intended to be a personal one.

HISTORY OF PARAGRAPH (1).

Modern changes in the law as to the devolution of trust property.

Previously to 1874 the devolution of trust estates was regulated by the ordinary common law rules in relation to the devolution of property of a similar character, to which the trustee was beneficially entitled. Thus, trust personalty, or trust leaseholds, devolved upon the trustee's legal personal representatives; and trust real estate devolved upon his heir, or passed to his devisee if he made a will which either expressly or impliedly passed the legal estate in such lands.

This state of the law has, however, been from time to time altered in a fashion even more half-hearted and complex than is usual with the attempts of Parliament to amend our law of property. The net result of this legislation seems to be as follows:

(1.) If a trustee of real estate died between August 7th, 1874, and January 1st, 1882, and was not a bare trustee (g), it descended to his heir-at-law or customary heir.

(2.) If he died between August 7th, 1874, and January 1st, 1876, and was a bare trustee, then the trust property during

(g) The statutory expression "bare trustee" has given rise to considerable difference of opinion. The late Sir GEORGE JESSEL thought it meant a trustee who had no beneficial interest in the property (Morgan v. Swansea Board, 9 Ch. D. 582). On the other hand, the late Vice-Chancellor HALL, in Christie v. Ovington, 1 Ch. D. 279; Vice-Chancellor BACON, in Re Docwra, 29 Ch. D. 693; and Mr. Justice STIRLING, in Re Cunningham and Frayling, [1891] 2 Ch. 567, all considered that it meant a trustee with no duties except to convey the property to or by the direction of the cestuis que trust, and that a trustee who also took a beneficial interest (e.g., as tenant in common) might be a bare trustee. It is considered that the latter view is the correct one.

that period was vested in his personal representatives ; but unless they conveyed it during that period, it shifted to his heir-at-law or customary heir on January 1st, 1876 (h).

Art. 59.

(3.) If he died between January 1st, 1876, and January 1st, 1882, and was a bare trustee, it devolved upon his personal representatives (i).

(4.) If he died on or after January 1st, 1882, and the property was freehold, it devolved (and still would devolve) upon his personal representatives, quite irrespective of whether he was or was not a bare trustee (k).

(5.) If he died between December 31st, 1881, and September 16th, 1887, and the trust property was of customary or copyhold tenure, it was during that period vested in his personal representatives ; but unless they conveyed it during that period it shifted to his customary heir on the latter date (l).

(6.) If he died on or after September 16th, 1887, and the trust property was of customary or copyhold tenure, it devolved (and still would devolve) on his customary heir (m).

As above stated, a sole or last surviving trustee who died on or before December 31st, 1881, was empowered to devise or bequeath the legal estate in the trust property of whatever tenure or nature (n) ; and a trustee of customary or copyhold lands can, it is apprehended, still do so. Trust estates capable of being devised pass under a general devise or bequest unless the will contains expressions authorising a narrower construction, or the disposition of the estate so devised or bequeathed be such as a testator would be unlikely to make of property not his own (o). Thus, where a testator subjected the property, passing under a general devise, to the payment of debts or legacies (p), or directed them to be sold (q), or devised them to persons as tenants in common (r), or to a numerous and unascertained class (s), or limited them in strict settlement, or in any other way which made it impossible to say the intention could be to give a dry trust estate, trust estates would not pass.

Party on whom trust estate devolves not necessarily able to execute the trust.

1. Whether, however, the person on whom the trust property devolves can exercise the duties and powers confided to the trustees by the settlement, depends on the intention of the settlor as expressed in the settlement. Thus, where the settlor gave personal property to A. B. upon trust "that the said A. B." do carry out certain specified objects, then upon the death of A. B., although the estate vested in his executor, the latter was unable to execute the trusts. For, as was said by Lord COTTENHAM in Mortimer v. Ireland (t), "whether the property is real or personal is no matter; for suppose a man appoints a trustee of real and personal estate simpliciter, adding nothing more, this cannot make his representative a trustee. . . . The property may vest in the representative, but that is quite another question from his being a trustee." However, his lordship's observation must not be taken literally. The representative would clearly be a trustee, but not the trustee to execute the express trust.

2. But where freeholds are vested in trustees, upon trust that "they or the survivor of them, or the heirs . . . of such survivor," shall perform the trust, or where personal property is vested in trustees upon trust that they or the survivor of them or the executors or administrators of the survivor shall perform the trust, then, upon the death of the survivor, the person on whom the trust estate devolves is able to execute the trust (u). I say the person on whom the estate devolves, because since December 31st, 1881, freehold trust estates devolve on the trustee's personal representatives, and not upon his heir; and notwithstanding that the settlement has conferred the trust upon the trustee and his heirs, the office will devolve on his personal representatives. For, by s. 30 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), it is enacted, that for this purpose "the personal representatives for the time being, of the deceased [trustee], shall be deemed in law his heirs and assigns, within the meaning of all trusts and powers" (x). This Act does not, however, extend to copyhold or customary estates (y).

Art. 59.

Where representatives mentioned, secus.

3. As above stated, a trustee who died before January 1st, 1882, could devise (and where it consists of copyhold or customary land, can still devise (z)) the estate, unless expressly, or by necessary implication, prohibited from doing so. Whether, however, a valid devise of the estate would confer on the devisee the right of executing the trust is very questionable, unless the settlement expressly confided the trust to the trustee or his assigns (a). At one time, owing to the decision of Vice-Chancellor SHADWELL, in Cooke v. Crawford (b), it was considered that a devisee of a trust estate could only execute the trust if it was, by the settlement, confided to the trustee and his assigns; but that doctrine, after being repeatedly questioned, was energetically dissented from by the late Sir GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in the case of Re Osborne and Rowlett (c), where his lordship, after elaborately showing its absurdity, and how often it had been questioned and doubted, and reviewing the whole of the authorities, said: "Therefore, looking at this state of things, we must consider Cooke v. Crawford overruled." His lordship was of opinion that the person to execute the trust is the person who takes the estate, not by accident, so to speak, but in accordance with the provisions of the instrument by which the trust was created. "There is a trust annexed to the estate, and when we find who is the person who takes the estate under the will, then we find who is the person to execute the trust." However, this decision of Sir GEORGE JESSEL'S was questioned by Lords Justices JAMES and BAGGALLAY in Re Morton and Hallett (d), where their lordships said, that as at present advised, they were not prepared to dissent from Cooke v. Crawford, or to concur in the opinion, expressed by Sir GEORGE JESSEL, that it had been overruled. The law, therefore, on the point, is in a far from satisfactory state. The point is not now of so much interest as it was formerly, inasmuch as, by s. 30 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, trust estates (except those of copyhold and customary tenure, which were taken out of that statute by s. 45 of the Copyhold Act, 1887), now s. 88 of the Copyhold Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 46), can no longer be devised; but the question may nevertheless, for some years to come, remain of importance in the investigation of titles to real estate.

trustee in his place in (inter alia) the event of his desiring to retire. This mode of retiring necessitates the appointment of a new trustee in the place of the one retiring. No question, however, can ever arise as to the costs of such an appointment inasmuch as ex hypothesi the power provides for the retirement of the trustee if he so desires. The costs, therefore, in such cases always fall on the estate and not on the retiring trustee. At one time such powers could only exist under the express provisions of the settlement; but for many years past such powers have been implied by statute in all trust instruments irrespective of the date at which they first came into operation (o), and will be discussed in the next article.

Retirement

of successor.

2. Before 1882 a trustee could only be discharged without the appointment of a successor in two cases, viz., (1) by the consent of all the beneficiaries (as to which see, infra), or (2) by order of the court which had (and still has) jurisdiction in a proper case to discharge one of two or more trustees without appointing a person to succeed him (p), although it is apprehended that since the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, the power would not be exercised.

However, parliament has now provided that "if, and so far as a contrary intention is not expressed" in the trust instrument, where there are more than two trustees, and one of them declares by deed that he is desirous of being discharged, and if his co-trustees and such other person (if any) as is empowered to appoint new trustees, by deed consent to his discharge and to the vesting in his co-trustees alone of the trust property, then he shall be discharged without any new trustee being appointed in his place (q).

Retirement

3. The method of retirement by consent of all the beneficiaries is merely a corollary of the rule in Saunders v. Vautier, discussed supra, p. 279. The beneficiaries collectively being the sole owners of the property and able to put an end to the trust, can à fortiori permit the trustee to retire.

(p) See Re Stokes, 13 Eq. 333.

(q) Trustee Act, 1893, s. 11.

4. Retirement by order of the court is now a comparatively rare method of retirement from a trust. It might arise where the trustee wishes to retire and either cannot procure a person to take his place, or being himself the appointing party, has a dispute with his beneficiaries in relation to the person to be appointed, or the persons to appoint are out of the country or cannot be found (r). In such cases he would be justified in issuing an originating summons under Order 54 b, r. 5, of the Rules of the Supreme Court for the appointment of a new trustee in his place. No doubt it was formerly considered that a trustee could not retire from his trust without some good reason, and that "if the circumstances preventing his continuing to perform his duties arose from any act of his own, or anything relating to himself he ought to pay the costs of the appointment of a new trustee (s). But this was long before the statutory power which enables a trustee to retire if desirous of being discharged; and it is conceived that now a trustee would be not only exempt from bearing the costs of an application to appoint a new trustee on his retirement (where it is difficult or impossible to appoint such a person under an express or the statutory power), but would also be entitled to his own costs (t); anyhow, it is the common practice.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF PARAGRAPH (1) (a).

Appointment of new trustees under express power. 1. Express powers to appoint new trustees are construed somewhat strictly. Thus, where an express power to appoint new trustees is vested in "the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee, or the heirs, executors, or administrators of the last surviving and continuing trustee," and all the trustees are desirous of retiring, they cannot do so by appointing new trustees in their place by one deed; but one must appoint a new trustee in the place of the first retiring trustee, and then the new trustee must appoint one in the place of the second retiring trustee, and so on (f). This singular instance of verbal subtlety all turns upon the idea, that trustees who are about to retire cannot be said to be continuing (g), but that if one retired first, the other would be a continuing trustee, although he might intend to retire the next day. If, in addition to the words "surviving and continuing," the words "or other trustee or trustees" had been added, the retiring trustees might have appointed new ones by the same deed (f).

"Continuing trustees or trustee." "Unfit and incapable," or "unable to act," or going abroad. 2. So, again, the words "unfit and incapable" are very strictly construed. Thus, where a new trustee was to be appointed if a trustee became incapable of acting, it was held that the bankruptcy of one of the trustees did not fulfil the condition, as it only rendered him unfit but not incap-

(f) Lord Camoys v. Best, 19 Beav. 414; Re Coates and Parsons, 34 Ch. D. 370; Re Norris, 27 Ch. D. 333. This notion was strongly disapproved by BACON, V.-C., in Re Glenny and Hartley, 25 Ch. D. 611; but the Vice-Chancellor's dicta were equally strongly disapproved by PEARSON, J., in Re Norris, supra, and by NORTH, J., in Re Coates and Parsons, supra.

(g) With regard to appointments made under the statutory power, this is not so, as the statute enacts that a continuing trustee shall include a refusing or retiring trustee, if willing to act, as donee of the power (Trustee Act, 1893, s. 10 (4)); but he is not a necessary party if unwilling to act (see Re Norris, Allen v. Norris, 27 Ch. D. 333).

able (h). And so where the words were "unable to act," it was held that absence in China or Australia did not disable (i), although it clearly unfitted (k), a trustee for the office. But where the power was to arise in case a trustee should "be abroad," the fact of his having taken a five years' lease of a residence in Normandy, was held to be sufficient to enable the donee of the power to displace him (l). So, it has been held that lunacy disables a trustee so as to bring a power into operation (m).

Art. 61.

With regard to a trustee becoming unfit to act, bankruptcy (at all events where the trust property consists of money or other property capable of being misappropriated, and where the cestuis que trusts desire his removal (n), and liquidation or composition (n), or conviction of a dishonest crime (o), are grounds for his removal by the court under s. 25 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (which has taken the place of s. 147 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883). Whether, however, they would enable a donee of a power of appointing new trustees to displace him hostilely on the ground of unfitness seems questionable. Anyhow, it has been held that infancy is not unfitness, although an infant will be removed by the court (p). Lastly, with regard to incapacity, the word is strictly limited to incapacity of the trustee arising from some personal defect (q), as illness, lunacy (r), or, possibly, infancy.

If there be no express power, or even if there be one and the statutory power is not expressly negatived or modified (u), and the express power is for some reason inapplicable to the state of circumstances that has arisen, new trustees may be appointed under the provisions of s. 10 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53). In that case, it has been held that the persons to exercise the statutory power are not the persons nominated to exercise the express power, but the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee, or the personal representatives of the last surviving or continuing trustee (v). This seems a rather narrow construction of the Act, the words of which are as follows:—

(1.) Where a trustee, either original or substituted, and whether appointed by a court or otherwise, is dead, or remains out of the United Kingdom for more than twelve months, or desires to be discharged from all or any of the trusts or powers reposed in or conferred on him, or refuses or is unfit to act therein, or is incapable of acting therein, then the person or persons nominated for the purpose of appointing new trustees by the instrument, if any, creating the trust (x), or if there is no such person, or no such person able and willing to act, then the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee for the time being, or the personal representatives of the last surviving or continuing trustee (y), may, by writing, appoint another person or other persons to be a trustee or trustees in the place of the trustee dead, remaining out of the United Kingdom, desiring to be discharged, refusing, or being unfit or being incapable, as aforesaid. Art. 61.

(2.) On the appointment of a new trustee (z) for the whole or any part of trust property—

- (a) the number of trustees may be increased ; and
- (b) a separate set of trustees may be appointed for any part of the trust property held on trusts distinct from those relating to any other part or parts of the trust property, notwithstanding that no new trustees or trustee are or is to be appointed for other parts of the trust property, and any existing trustee may be appointed or remain one of such separate set of trustees ; or, if only one trustee was originally appointed, then one separate trustee may be so appointed for the first-mentioned part ; and
- (c) it shall not be obligatory to appoint more than one new trustee where only one trustee was originally appointed, or to fill up the original number of trustees where more than two trustees were originally appointed ; but, except where only one trustee was originally appointed, a trustee shall not be discharged under this section from his trust unless there will be at least two trustees to perform the trust ; and
- (d) any assurance or thing requisite for vesting the trust property, or any part thereof, jointly in the persons who are the trustees, shall be executed or done.

(3.) Every new trustee so appointed, as well before as after all the trust property becomes by law, or by assurance, or otherwise, vested in him, shall have the same powers, authorities, and discretions, and may in all respects act, as if he had been originally appointed a trustee by the instrument, if any, creating the trust.

(4.) The provisions of this section relative to a trustee who is dead include the case of a person nominated trustee in a will but dying before the testator, and those relative to a continuing trustee include

(y) This includes the executor of a sole trustee (Re Shafto, 29 Ch. D. 247), but not the executor of a person who was nominated trustee of a will but died before the testator (Nicholson v. Field, [1893] 2 Ch. 511 ; but cf. Re Ambler, 59 L. T. 206).

(z) These words govern the whole sub-section, so that the number of trustees cannot be increased unless there be a vacancy to be filled up (Re Gregson, 34 Ch. D. 209 ; Re Driver, 19 Eq. 352).

Art. 61. a refusing or retiring trustee, if willing to act in the execution of the provisions of this section.

(5.) This section applies only if and as far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the instrument, if any, creating the trust, and shall have effect subject to the terms of that instrument and to any provisions therein contained.

(6.) This section applies to trusts created either before or after the commencement of this Act.

This section (which is a re-enactment of s. 31 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41)) has put an end to many questions which formerly presented much difficulty. For instance, where a trustee had gone abroad, it was always a source of trouble to determine what amount of absence constituted a disability or unfitness for his continuing a trustee (a). Now, however, twelve months is specified as the period (b). It will be seen that the power is exercisable in six cases, viz.: (1) on the death of a trustee; (2) where he remains out of the kingdom for twelve months; (3) where he desires to be discharged; (4) where he refuses to act; (5) where he is unfit to act, and (6) where he is incapable of acting. The first three cases require no comment. With regard to the case of a refusal to act, it is apprehended that it clearly extends to the case of a disclaimer—i.e., to a case where the person nominated trustee has never accepted the office (c). With regard to a trustee becoming unfit to act or incapable of acting, the reader is referred to Illustration 2, p. 296, supra.

Where donees of express power differ, the statutory power is available.

Where there are joint donees of a power of appointment named in the settlement, and they differ as to the person to be appointed, they will be deemed to be "unable or unwilling" to appoint, so as to vest the statutory power in the surviving or continuing trustees (d). Lastly, it may be observed that the statutory power is not imperative, and imposes no obligation on the donee of the power to appoint

(a) See Re Harrison, 22 L. J. Ch. 69; Re Bignold, 7 Ch. App. 223.

1. Where the power of appointing new trustees is vested in a person who is lawfully detained as a lunatic, or where the power is only exercisable with the consent of that person, the proper course is to apply to the Masters in Lunacy by summons to appoint a person to exercise the power or to give the required consent on behalf of the lunatic (f). The master who makes the order has also jurisdiction, under s. 129 of the Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5), to make an order vesting the property in the new trustees when appointed (g).

Power vested in or only exercisable with consent of a lunatic.

2. Thus, where a sole surviving trustee was a person lawfully detained in an asylum and was the person to exercise the statutory power of appointing new trustees, it was held that the master had jurisdiction to appoint a person to exercise the power by appointing two new trustees, and to make an order vesting the trust property in the trustees so appointed. The advantage of this simple procedure appears to be, that the court has no jurisdiction to appoint new trustees and make a vesting order under ss. 135 to 142 of the Lunacy Act in the case of lunatics not so found if the alleged lunatic appears. But under this procedure the mere fact that the party is lawfully detained as a lunatic is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction. The summons in such matters ought merely to be entitled "in the matter of A. B." (the lunatic). As will be seen later on (p. 317, infra), where the lunatic is not the appointing party, this simple method of vesting the property in the new trustees is not available, and so far as it is in the lunatic, and cannot be got out of him by a vesting declaration under s. 12 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), a petition to the Lunacy Court may have to be resorted to.

Advantage of this procedure.

Appointment
of new trustees by the court.

1. The power of the High Court to appoint new trustees is now contained in the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53). The Lunacy Court has, however, concurrent jurisdiction to appoint a new trustee where an existing one is a lunatic, whether so found or not (h); and, as the High Court has no jurisdiction to make a vesting order as to property vested in a lunatic trustee (whether so found or not), unless he be an infant, the proper course, where a vesting order is required, is to apply to the Lunacy Court, and not to the High Court (i). The following are the statutes relating to the appointment of trustees by the High Court and Lunacy Court respectively:

Statutory
power of High Court.

2. By s. 25 of the Trustee Act, 1893, it is enacted that—

(1.) The High Court may, whenever it is expedient to appoint a new trustee or new trustees, and it is found inexpedient, difficult, or impracticable so to do without the assistance of the court, make an order for the appointment of a new trustee or new trustees either in substitution for or in addition to any existing trustee or trustees, or although there is no existing trustee. In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, the court may make an order for the appointment of a new trustee in substitution for a trustee who is convicted of felony, or is a bankrupt (k).

(2.) An order under this section, and any consequential vesting order or conveyance, shall not operate further or otherwise as a discharge to any former or continuing trustee than an appointment of new trustees under any power for that purpose contained in any instrument would have operated.

(3.) Nothing in this section shall give power to appoint an executor or administrator.

And by s. 37 of the same Act, it is enacted that—

Every trustee appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction shall, as well before as after the trust property becomes by law, or by assurance, or otherwise, vested in him, have the same powers, authorities, and discretions, and may in all respects act as if he had been originally appointed a trustee by the instrument, if any, creating the trust. Art. 61.

3. Section 141 of the Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5), is as follows :

Statutory
power of Lunacy Court.

In every case in which the Judge in Lunacy has jurisdiction to order a conveyance or transfer of land or stock or to make a vesting order, he may also make an order appointing a new trustee or new trustees.

Sections 135 and 136 in effect provide that the judge may make vesting orders whenever a lunatic is solely or jointly seised or possessed of any land upon trust or by way of mortgage or is solely or jointly entitled to any stock or chose in action upon trust or by way of mortgage.

4. It will be perceived that application should only be made to the court to appoint new trustees in cases where, from some reason or other, it is difficult, inexpedient, or impracticable to appoint them under an express power, or the statutory power; and if such an application be made unnecessarily, it will be dismissed with costs.

Examples of cases in which application to court is proper.

5. However, there are many cases in which it is impossible to appoint new trustees out of court. Thus, if a last surviving or a sole trustee died intestate, and left no personal estate, so that no one could take out letters of administration to him, and no one was named in the settlement to appoint new trustees, it was formerly necessary to apply to the High Court. But probably this is no longer so, as the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65, s. 1 (3)), enables letters of administration to be granted in respect of real estate alone. And so where a trustee has become, through old age and infirmity, incapable of acting in the trust, the court has exercised its jurisdiction of appointing new trustees (l).

6. Again, where, by inadvertence, or by reason of disclaimer, death or otherwise, there never were any original trustees of the settlement, and no express power of appointing any, the court will appoint some (m).

Art. 61.

Appointment
by court where trustee
an infant.

7. So, where a trustee is an infant, the court will appoint another in his place; but this will be done without prejudice to any application by the infant, on coming of age, to be restored (n).

Appointment
by court
in cases of doubt.

8. So, if there is a doubt whether the statutory (or an express) power applies, the court will solve it by appointing new trustees itself (o).

Appointment
by court where donee of power abroad.

9. So it has been held that where the power of appointing new trustees was given to a husband and wife jointly, and they were judicially separated, and the husband was living in Australia, it was a case in which it was "difficult or impracticable" to appoint new trustees, without the assistance of the court, so as to give the latter jurisdiction (p).

Appointment
by court where the donees of power cannot agree.

10. So, where the persons to whom the power of appointment has been confided cannot agree upon the choice of the new trustees, the court will appoint. But see as to this, supra, p. 300.

Appointment
by court
where trustee a felon or bankrupt.

11. Where a trustee is a felon, or a bankrupt, and refuses to join in the appointment of a new trustee in his place, the court can and will remove him, and appoint another person if the cestuis que trusts desire it (q); and a similar observation applies to a trustee who has become a lunatic (r), or has gone to reside permanently abroad (s), or has absconded.

person than the real purchaser (u), the court first requires the trust to be established to its satisfaction, and that can only be done by an action.

Art. 61.

13. It was at one time thought that where there were properly appointed trustees in existence, and it was impossible otherwise to vest the trust property in them, or where it was desirable to remove one of several trustees and impossible to get anyone to serve in his place, the court could, in the one case, re-appoint all the existing trustees and order the trust property to vest in them; or, in the other case, re-appoint the continuing trustees in the place of themselves and the trustee whom it was desired to remove. However, it is now well settled that the court has no jurisdiction to re-appoint existing trustees (x). Court will not re-appoint existing trustees.

14. Although the statutory power of increasing the number of trustees on an appointment out of court, can only be exercised when there is a vacancy to be filled up, yet there is no such limitation on the power of the court to increase the number of trustees at any time if it should be deemed expedient (y). Court can increase the number at any time.

15. Although s. 25 (3) of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), expressly prohibits the court from appointing an executor or administrator, yet where a testator has not appointed a trustee of trust legacies, and where, consequently, the trusteeship is incident to the office of executor, the court has jurisdiction on the death of the executor to appoint someone to perform those fiduciary duties (z). Art. 61. donees of powers ought to be guided by the same considerations, although, no doubt, their appointments would not be invalidated if they failed to observe them.

First, regard will be paid to the wishes of the settlor as expressed in, or plainly deduced from the settlement.

Secondly, a person will not be appointed with a view to the interest of some of the beneficiaries in opposition to the interest of others.

Thirdly, regard will be had to the question whether the appointment will promote or impede the execution of the trust; but (semble) the mere fact of a continuing trustee refusing to act with the proposed new trustee, will not be sufficient to induce the court to refrain from appointing him (a).

Persons proper to be appointed new trustees.

2. With reference to the question as to the personal fitness of a proposed new trustee, an infant can, no doubt, be appointed an original trustee, but it would not be a wise appointment; and a retiring trustee most certainly ought not to concur in the appointment of an infant to replace him. For an infant cannot properly carry out a special trust during his minority, and a person who should appoint one might not improbably find that he would have to pay the costs of an action instituted for the purpose of removing the infant (b), as he cannot be supplanted as "unfit" by the appointment of a new trustee under s. 10 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53) (c).

Appointment

3. A tenant for life has been held to be a not improper appointment (d); but it certainly is not an advisable one. For one of the main objects of a trustee is to protect the remainderman against the tenant for life.

person entitled in remainder is somewhat opposed to that of a tenant for life; and it would be for his advantage to lay out trust money in making improvements on the property, instead of making accumulations for the benefit of the tenant for life. Of course, however, such an objection would be inapplicable where a tenant for life is sui juris and consents to the appointment.

Art. 61.

5. The solicitor to the trust is not a proper person to be appointed a new trustee. Such an appointment would not, however, be bad, so as to invalidate the acts of the trustee so appointed; but the court would not make, or sanction, such an appointment (f).

Appointment of solicitor to the trust.

6. The husband of a beneficiary entitled for her separate use ought not to be appointed; for his interests are entirely in conflict with those of his wife. The court will never make such an appointment unless it is impossible to get another person, and even then will generally do so only upon condition that a direction is inserted in the order, stipulating that, upon his becoming sole trustee, there shall be another appointed (g). In one case (h), KAY, J., appointed two persons, one of whom was a beneficiary, and the other the husband of a beneficiary, upon their both undertaking, if either were left sole trustee, to endeavour to obtain the appointment of a new trustee.

7. It is not proper to appoint a trustee who resides out of the jurisdiction, save under very exceptional circumstances (i). But where all the beneficiaries were resident in Australia, the court appointed a person resident there (k).

Appointment
of married woman.

9. A married woman may undoubtedly be a trustee (l), but she is not a desirable person for the office, at all events where real estate is concerned. No doubt she can exercise powers collateral, or in gross, or appendant (m); but she can only execute a trust to sell real estate (or semble chattels real, unaccompanied by a power of appointment), with her husband's consent and joinder. For the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), does not apply to land vested in a married woman as trustee (n), and consequently she can only convey it with the joinder of her husband, and by an acknowledged deed. And it is apprehended, that even where a power is vested in her to sell, she would not be capable of entering into a binding contract to execute the power, as it is no question affecting her separate estate (o). Moreover, the necessity of getting her husband's joinder (which he might possibly withhold), the expense of acknowledgments, and the probability that the trust will be really executed by her husband, and not by herself, makes a married woman a far from desirable trustee in most cases. Some judges have even objected to appoint spinsters as trustees (p).

ART. 62.—Vesting of Trust Property in new Trustees.

(1) On a change in the trusteeship, the trust property should be vested jointly in the persons who are for the future to be the trustees (r). This may be done:—

- (a) by the ordinary modes of transferring property;
- (b) since the 31st December, 1881, by a vesting declaration in the deed by which a trustee is appointed (or by which one retires) under sect. 12 of the Trustee Act, 1893;
- (c) where neither of the foregoing means are feasible, application may be made, by summons to a judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice (or, in case of lunacy or unsoundness of mind of the appointor, or of a trustee who is being displaced, to the Lunacy Court) for a vesting order (s).

(2) On the appointment of a new trustee by the court, a vesting order will be made, vesting the trust property in the new trustee or trustees, either alone, or jointly with the continuing trustee or trustees, as the case may require.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF PARAGRAPH (1) (b).

1. Before the year 1882, difficulties frequently arose in relation to the vesting of the trust property on the appointment of new trustees, owing to the fact that the legal estate

Art. 62. — could only be transferred by the persons in whom it was legally vested, or by a vesting order of the court. For instance, a trustee might leave the country permanently, or become a lunatic, or (being a sole trustee) die intestate and without any heir. The legal estate being vested in him, could only be got out of him by a duly executed conveyance or assignment, or by an order of the court; and as the former could not be obtained, the latter became a matter of necessity. However, by s. 34 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), re-enacted by s. 12 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), this difficulty was to a great extent obviated, although not completely; for it does not apply to all kinds of property, so that applications to the court for vesting orders will still have to be made in many cases.

(1) Where a deed by which a new trustee is appointed to perform any trust contains a declaration by the appointor to the effect that any estate or interest in any land subject to the trust, or in any chattel so subject, or the right to recover and receive any debt or other thing in action so subject, shall vest in the persons who by virtue of the deed become and are the trustees for performing the trust, that declaration shall, without any conveyance or assignment, operate to vest in those persons, as joint tenants, and for the purposes of the trust, that estate, interest, or right.

(2) Where a deed by which a retiring trustee is discharged under this Act contains such a declaration as is in this section mentioned by the retiring and continuing trustees, and by the other person, if any, empowered to appoint trustees, that declaration shall, without any conveyance or assignment, operate to vest in the continuing trustees alone, as joint tenants, and for the purposes of the trust, the estate, interest, or right to which the declaration relates.

(3) This section does not extend to any legal estate or interest in copyhold or customary land, or to land conveyed by way of mortgage where the lunatic is the person who has power to appoint the new trustee, see supra, p. 301. The court cannot, however, under this Act make a vesting order where the legal estate in the entirety, and the beneficial interest in part of land, is vested in the Crown. In such a case the proper procedure is to issue a summons asking for a sale under s. 5 of the Intestates' Estates Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 71) (Re Pratt, 55 L. T. 313).

for securing money subject to the trust, or to any such share, stock, annuity, or property as is only transferable in books kept by a company or other body, or in manner prescribed by or under Act of Parliament.

Art. 62.

(4) For purposes of registration of the deed in any registry, the person or persons making the declaration shall be deemed the conveying party or parties, and the conveyance shall be deemed to be made by him or them under a power conferred by this Act.

(5) This section applies only to deeds executed after the thirty-first of December one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.

It will be perceived that the declaration must be contained in the deed by which the new trustee is appointed. With regard to property which does not pass by a vesting declaration, copyholds must be vested by surrender and admittance, in the usual way. Mortgages are invariably transferred without disclosing the trust, so as to keep it off the face of the mortgagor's title. Stocks, shares, etc., are transferred by deed of transfer, duly registered with the bank or company.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF PARAGRAPH (2).

1. The jurisdiction of the court to make orders vesting trust property in the trustees for the time being of a settlement, is codified in ss. 26, 32, 34, 35, and 36 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), and as to trustees, who have become lunatic or of unsound mind, in ss. 129, 135 and 136 of the Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5) (u). The sections of the Trustee Act, 1893, above referred to, are as follows:—

Vesting orders made by the Chancery Division of the court (t).

26. In any of the following cases, namely:—

(i.) Where the High Court appoints or has appointed a new trustee (x); and Trustee Act, 1893, s. 26.

(t) By s. 41 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), this jurisdiction extends to land and personal estate in his Majesty's dominions, except Scotland. See Re Hewitt, 6 W. R. 537, and Re Lamotte, 4 Ch. D. 325. Similar powers were given to the Irish courts by the Trustee Act, 1893, Amendment Act, 1894.

(u) See infra, p. 316.

(x) It is apprehended that the intention of the legislature was that each of these paragraphs should stand alone, and that the

Art. 62.

- (ii.) Where a trustee (y) entitled to or possessed of any land (z), or entitled to a contingent right therein, either solely or jointly (a) with any other person,—
 - (a) is an infant (b), or
 - (b) is out of the jurisdiction of the High Court (c), or
 - (c) cannot be found; and
- (iii.) Where it is uncertain who was the survivor of two or more trustees jointly entitled to or possessed of any land; and
- (iv.) Where, as to the last trustee known to have been entitled to or possessed of any land, it is uncertain whether he is living or dead; and
- (v.) Where there is no heir or personal representative to a trustee (d) who was entitled to or possessed of land and circumstances enumerated in each should give jurisdiction to make a vesting order. That was so under the Trustee Act, 1850, and the court made vesting orders on the appointment of new trustees, even though there was no incapacity in the person in whom the estate was vested to convey it to the new trustees (Re Manning, Kay, App. xxviii.; Hancox v. Spittle, 3 Sm. & G. 478). However, in the new section, the language is not very happy, as, if we read paragraph (i.), and omit paragraphs (ii.) to (vi.), there is nothing to show to what the words "the land," which is to be vested, refer.

(y) The word "trustee" includes a constructive trustee, e.g., the heir of a testator whose trustees have predeceased him or disclaimed (Wilkes v. Groom, 6 D. M. & G. 205; and see Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 50).

(z) It is apprehended that "land" includes leaseholds; for it was stated in the memorandum annexed to the bill that the words "entitled to or possessed of" were substituted for the words "seised or possessed of" (which were used in the Act of 1850), for the express purpose of including leaseholds. See also s. 50, where land is defined as including land of any tenure. The matter might, however, with advantage, have been made plainer. Under the old Act there was no power to vest leaseholds, except on the appointment of new trustees by the court. The corresponding section of the Lunacy Act, 1890, contains the old words "seised or possessed," and consequently it seems questionable whether the lunacy judges have power to make vesting orders of leaseholds. As to whether the court has jurisdiction to vest the right to the title deeds, see De Sayres v. De Sayres, 87 L. T. Notes, 93.

(a) The word "jointly" is not to be construed strictly. It includes coparceners (Re Greenwood, 27 Ch. D. 359).

(b) Even if the infant be also a lunatic, this gives the Chancery Division jurisdiction. See Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5), s. 143.

(c) A merely temporary absence (e.g., that of a sailor on a voyage) is not sufficient (Hutchinson v. Stephens, 5 Sim. 499). On the other hand, where a person out of the jurisdiction is a lunatic, this paragraph gives to the Chancery Division a jurisdiction which in the case of a lunatic in England would be only exercisable by the lunacy judges (Re Gardner, 10 Ch. D. 29).

has died intestate as to that land, or where it is uncertain who is the heir or personal representative or devisee of a trustee who was entitled to or possessed of land and is dead ; and

- (vi.) Where a trustee jointly or solely entitled to or possessed of any land, or entitled to a contingent right therein, has been required, by or on behalf of a person entitled to require a conveyance of the land or a release of the right, to convey the land or to release the right, and has wilfully (e) refused or neglected to convey the land or release the right for twenty-eight days after the date of the requirement ;

the High Court may make an order (in this Act called a vesting order) vesting the land in any such person in any such manner and for any such estate (f) as the court may direct, or releasing or disposing of the contingent right to such person as the court may direct.

Provided that—

- (a.) Where the order is consequential on the appointment of a new trustee the land shall be vested for such estate as the court may direct in the persons who on the appointment are the trustees ; and
- (b.) Where the order relates to a trustee entitled jointly with another person, and such trustee is out of the jurisdiction of the High Court or cannot be found, the land or right shall be vested in such other person, either alone or with some other person.

32. A vesting order under any of the foregoing provisions shall in Trustee Act, the case of a vesting order consequential on the appointment of a 1893, s. 32. new trustee, have the same effect as if the persons who before the appointment were the trustees (if any) had duly executed all proper conveyances of the land for such estate as the High Court directs, or if there is no such person, or no such person of full capacity, then

(e) A trustee's conduct in not conveying cannot be considered wilful, if the title of the applicant to call for a conveyance is subject to a dispute which leads the trustee to entertain a bonâ fide doubt as to his title (Re Mills, 40 Ch. D. 14). But if he has acted unreasonably he may have to pay the costs (Re Knox, [1895] 1 Ch. 538). The petition must not be even presented until the twenty-eight days have elapsed (Re Knox, supra).

(f) Under these words the court can vest the estate of a tenant in tail in a purchaser in fee simple, but it usually appoints some person to execute a regular disentailing assurance under s. 33. See Caswell v. Sheen, W. N. (1893) 187 ; and Powell v. Matthews, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 973 ; Mason v. Mason, W. N. (1878) 41.

Art. 62. — as if such person had existed and been of full capacity and had duly executed all proper conveyances of the land for such estate as the court directs, and shall in every other case have the same effect as if the trustee or other person or description or class of persons to whose rights or supposed rights the said provisions respectively relate had been an ascertained and existing person of full capacity, and had executed a conveyance or release to the effect intended by the order.

Trustee Act,
1893, ss. 33—
35. 33. In all cases where a vesting order can be made under any of the foregoing provisions, the High Court may, if it is more convenient, appoint a person to convey the land or release the contingent right, and a conveyance or release by that person in conformity with the order shall have the same effect as an order under the appropriate provision.

34.—(1.) Where an order vesting copyhold land (g) in any person is made under this Act with the consent of the lord or lady of the manor, the land shall vest accordingly without surrender or admittance.

(2.) Where an order is made under this Act appointing any person to convey any copyhold land, that person shall execute and do all assurances and things for completing the assurance of the land ; and the lord and lady of the manor and every other person shall, subject to the customs of the manor and the usual payments, be bound to make admittance to the land and to do all other acts for completing the assurance thereof, as if the persons in whose place an appointment is made were free from disability and had executed and done those assurances and things.

35.—(1.) In any of the following cases, namely :—

- (i.) Where the High Court appoints or has appointed a new trustee ; and
- (ii.) Where a trustee entitled alone or jointly with another person to stock (h) or to a chose in action—
 - (a) is an infant, or

(g) As to what fines are payable, see Paterson v. Paterson, 2 Eq. 31 ; and Hall v. Bromley, 35 Ch. D. 642.

(h) Stock includes fully paid-up shares, and any fund, annuity, or security transferable in books kept by any company or society, or by instrument of transfer, either alone or accompanied by other formalities, and any share or interest therein (s. 50). Under the repealed Act of 1850, stock includes shares not fully paid-up (Re New Zealand, etc. Co., [1893] 1 Ch. 403) ; but query whether the above definition would admit of such a construction being given to the new Act. As to orders under Lunacy Act, 1890, see Re Gregson, [1893] 3 Ch. 233.

Art. 62.

- (b) is out of the jurisdiction of the High Court (i), or
 - (c) cannot be found ; or
 - (d) neglects or refuses to transfer stock or receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for or recover a chose in action, according to the direction of the person absolutely entitled thereto for twenty-eight days next after a request in writing has been made to him by the person so entitled, or
 - (e) neglects or refuses to transfer stock or receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for or recover a chose in action for twenty-eight days next after an order of the High Court for that purpose has been served on him ; or
- (iii.) Where it is uncertain whether a trustee entitled alone or jointly with another person to stock or to a chose in action is alive or dead (k), the High Court may make an order vesting the right to transfer (l) or call for a transfer of stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for or recover a chose in action, in any such person as the court may appoint :

Provided that—

- (a) Where the order is consequential on the appointment by the court of a new trustee, the right shall be vested in the persons who, on the appointment, are the trustees ; and

(i) See note (s), supra, p. 304. Where one trustee was a lunatic and the other out of the jurisdiction, and two new ones had been appointed under a power, the Court of Appeal, acting in lunacy, vested the stock in the one out of the jurisdiction, and then, acting under their Chancery jurisdiction, “ it appearing that he was out of the jurisdiction,” vested it in the new trustees (Re Batho, 39 Ch. D. 189).

(k) It will be perceived that, except where the court is appointing new trustees, it has no jurisdiction to make a vesting order of stock where the last surviving or only trustee has died without leaving a legal personal representative. At one time (as also in the case of leaseholds) the court used to get over this difficulty by reappointing trustees already appointed out of court, and by making a vesting order consequential on such reappointment (Re Rathbone, 2 Ch. D. 483 ; Re Dalgleish, 4 Ch. D. 143 ; Re Crowe (No. 2), 14 Ch. D. 610). However, it is now well settled that the court has no jurisdiction to reappoint trustees who are already validly appointed (Re Vicat, 33 Ch. D. 103 ; Re Dewhirst, ib. 416 ; Re Gardner, ib. 590 ; Re Batho, 39 Ch. D. 189). Consequently, the former device is no longer available, and a legal personal representative has to be constituted in such cases.

(l) Where the trust funds are invested in unauthorised stocks, the order will give the new trustees, or purchasers from them, the right to call for a transfer, etc. (Re Peacock, 14 Ch. D. 212).

Art. 62.

- (b) Where the person whose right is dealt with by the order was entitled jointly with another person, the right shall be vested in that last-mentioned person either alone or jointly with any other person whom the court may appoint.

(2.) In all cases where a vesting order can be made under this section, the court may, if it is more convenient, appoint some proper person to make or join in making the transfer.

(3.) The person in whom the right to transfer or call for the transfer of any stock is vested by an order of the court under this Act, may transfer the stock to himself or any other person, according to the order, and the Banks of England and Ireland and all other companies shall obey every order under this section according to its tenor.

(4.) After notice in writing of an order under this section it shall not be lawful for the Bank of England or of Ireland or any other company to transfer any stock to which the order relates or to pay any dividends thereon except in accordance with the order.

(5.) The High Court may make declarations and give directions concerning the manner in which the right to any stock or chose in action vested under the provisions of this Act is to be exercised.

(6.) The provisions of this Act as to vesting orders shall apply to shares in ships registered under the Acts relating to merchant shipping as if they were stock.

Trustee Act,

36.—(1.) An order under this Act for the appointment of a new trustee or concerning any land, stock, or chose in action subject to a trust, may be made on the application of any person beneficially interested (m) in the land, stock, or chose in action, whether under disability or not, or on the application of any person duly appointed trustee thereof.

(2.) An order under this Act concerning any land, stock, or chose in action subject to a mortgage may be made on the application of any person beneficially interested in the equity of redemption, whether under disability or not, or of any person interested in the money secured by the mortgage.

master in lunacy to make on summons any such vesting order as the High Court can make under the Trustee Act, 1893, on the appointment of new trustees, where under s. 127 of the Lunacy Act, he appoints some person to exercise in the name or on behalf of the lunatic any power vested in the lunatic of appointing new trustees (o); as to which the reader is referred to p. 301, supra. Where, however, the lunatic has not the power of appointing new trustees, but the trust property is vested in him, and cannot be got out of him by any other means, then a petition must be presented under ss. 135, 136 (p), which are in the following words:—

135.—(1.) When a lunatic (q) is solely or jointly seised or possessed of any land upon trust or by way of mortgage the judge in lunacy may by order vest such land in such person or persons (r) for such estate, and in such manner, as he directs. Lunacy Act, 1890, s. 135.

(2.) When a lunatic is solely or jointly entitled to a contingent right in any land upon trust or by way of mortgage, the judge may by order release such hereditaments from the contingent right, and dispose of the same to such person or persons as the judge directs.

(3.) An order under sub-sections (1) and (2) shall have the same effect as if the trustee or mortgagee had been sane, and had executed a deed conveying the lands for the estate named in the order, or releasing or disposing of the contingent right.

(4.) In all cases where an order can be made under this section the judge may, if it is more convenient, appoint a person to convey the land, or release the contingent right, and a conveyance or release by such person in conformity with the order shall have the same effect as an order under sub-sections (1) and (2).

(r) The court will not vest the property in a beneficiary who is absolutely entitled, but will appoint a new trustee (Re Holland, 16 Ch. D. 672; cf. Re Godfrey, 23 ib. 205; and Re Currie, 10 Ch. D. 93). Where one of several trustees becomes insane, the court will not vest the property in the remaining trustees, even if it has jurisdiction to do so, but a new trustee must first be appointed (Re Nash, 16 Ch. Lunacy Act,

136.—(1.) Where a lunatic is solely entitled to any stock or chose in action upon trust or by way of mortgage, the judge in lunacy may by order vest in any person or persons the right to transfer or call for a transfer of the stock, or to receive the dividends thereof, or to sue for the chose in action.

(2.) In the case of any person or persons jointly entitled with a lunatic to any stock or chose in action upon trust or by way of mortgage, the judge may make an order vesting the right to transfer or call for a transfer of the stock, or to receive the dividends thereof, or to sue for the chose in action either in such person or persons alone or jointly with any other person or persons.

(3.) When any stock is standing in the name of a deceased person, whose personal representative is a lunatic, or when a chose in action is vested in a lunatic as the personal representative of a deceased person, the judge may make an order vesting the right to transfer or call for a transfer of the stock, or to receive the dividends thereof, or to sue for the chose in action in any person or persons he may appoint.

(4.) In all cases where an order can be made under this section the judge may, if it is more convenient, appoint some proper person to make or join in making the transfer.

(5.) The person or persons in whom the right to transfer or call for a transfer of any stock is vested, may execute and do all powers of attorney, assurances, and things to complete the transfer to himself or themselves or any other person or persons according to the order, and the bank and all other companies and their officers and all other persons shall be bound to obey every order under this section according to its tenor.

(6.) After notice in writing of an order under this section, it shall not be lawful for the bank or any other company to transfer any stock to which the order relates or to pay any dividends thereon except in accordance with the order.

Art. 63.

ART. 63.—Severance of Trust on Appointment of new Trustees.

“A separate set of trustees may be appointed for any part of the trust property held on trusts distinct from those relating to any other part or parts of the trust property, notwithstanding that no new trustee is to be appointed for such other parts, and any existing trustee may be appointed or remain one of such separate set of trustees; or, if only one trustee was originally appointed, then one separate trustee may be so appointed for the first-mentioned part” (s).

ILLUSTRATION.

Thus, if a testator gives real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the income to A. during her life, and after her death to sell and divide the proceeds into two parts, and to hold one of such parts in trust for A.'s daughter Mary, for life, with remainder for her children, and the other of such parts in trust for A.'s daughter Ann, for life, with remainder to her children, then upon the death of A., and the appointment of new trustees, separate sets of trustees may now be appointed to administer the trusts of Mary's and Ann's respective shares. It would seem that, before December 31st, 1882, this could not have been done, except by the court (t). The section applies notwithstanding that the trusts, although separate for a time, may ultimately again unite in favour of one individual (u).

ART. 64.—Right to Reimbursement and Indemnity.

(1) A trustee is entitled to be reimbursed out of the trust property (a) all expenses which he has properly paid or incurred in the execution of the trust (b). Moreover, a person who is sui juris and beneficially entitled to trust property which he cannot disclaim, is bound personally to indemnify the trustee against liabilities incident to such property, whether he originally created the trust, or accepted a transfer of the beneficial ownership with knowledge of the trust (c).

(2) The question as to what expenses are, and what are not properly incurred, depends upon the circumstances of each particular case (d).

(b) Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 24; Worral v. Harford, 8 Ves. 8; Morrison v. Morrison, 4 K. & J. 458; Re German Mining Co., 4 D. M. & G. 19.

(c) Hardoon v. Belilios, [1901] A. C. 118. The previous cases at law such as Hosegood v. Pedler, 66 L. J. Q. B. 18, are inapplicable, the right being peculiarly an equitable one. Cf. Jervis v. Wolferstan, 18 Eq., at p. 24; Fraser v. Murdoch, 6 App. Cas., at p. 872; Re German Mining Co., 4 D. M. & G. 19, 54; Hobbs v. Wayet, 36 Ch. D. 256.

(d) Leedham v. Chawner, 4 K. & J. 458.

(3) Although, as between the beneficiaries, such expenses are generally payable out of capital (e), yet, until they are paid, the trustee has a lien for them, on both capital and income (f), in priority to the claims of the beneficiaries (g). Art. 64.

(4) Where a trustee has committed a breach of trust, he will not be allowed to reimburse himself his expenses until he has made good the breach (h).

ILLUSTRATIONS OF PARAGRAPHS (1) AND (2).

1. In Bennett v. Wyndham (i), a trustee, in the due execution of his trust, directed a bailiff, employed on the trust property, to have certain trees felled. The bailiff ordered the wood-cutters usually employed on the property to fell the trees, in doing which they negligently allowed a bough to fall on to a passer-by, who, being injured, recovered heavy damages from the trustee in a court of law. These damages were, however, allowed to the trustee out of the trust property. Damages recovered by third parties.

2. So where a trustee of shares has been obliged to pay calls upon them, he is entitled to be reimbursed (k), not merely out of the trust estate, but also, if necessary, by the beneficiary personally if the latter be sui juris, and is no longer in a position to disclaim the beneficial interest (l); and the right to be indemnified (at all events out of the trust property) accrues directly the liability is proved to Calls on shares.

exist (m). However, there must be some proof that the liability is not merely imaginary; for a person entitled to be indemnified cannot sue quia timet, or, in other words, he cannot claim a declaration of his right to indemnity before the contingency which creates the damage has arisen (n). Therefore, although a trustee may, as such, be a member of a company which is being wound up, he cannot bring an action to establish his right to an indemnity, unless he can establish the fact that calls must be made (n).

Indemnity
for liabilities incurred in carrying on

3. So where trustees or executors have rightly carried on a business in accordance with the provisions of a will or settlement, they are entitled to be indemnified out of the trust estate against any liabilities which they have properly incurred (o). And this right will prevail even against creditors of the testator himself if they have assented to the business being carried on in the interest as well of themselves as of the beneficiaries under the will (o). But where the settlement has directed a trustee to employ a specific portion only of the estate for the purpose of carrying on the business, the rule is, that, although the trustee is personally liable to creditors for debts incurred by him in carrying on the trade pursuant to the settlement, his right to indemnity is limited to the specific assets so directed to be employed (p). The creditors of a trust business have no original right to claim payment of their debts out of the trust estate (q). Their remedy is against the trustee whom they trusted; but they have also a right to be put in his place against the trust estate (r). If, therefore, the trustee is (by reason of breach of trust or otherwise) himself indebted to the trust estate to an extent exceeding his claim to indemnity, then, inasmuch as he cannot be entitled to an indemnity except upon the terms of making good his own indebtedness to the trust, the creditors are in no better position, and can have no claim against the estate (s). Art. 64.

4. A trustee or executor will be allowed the amount of a solicitor's bill of costs which he has paid for services rendered in the matter of the trust (t); even, it would seem, where the necessity for the services arose through want of caution on the part of the trustee: e.g., where proceedings had to be taken by an administrator against an agent to whom he had entrusted moneys to make payments (u). However, under the Solicitors Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 39), beneficiaries may, at the discretion of the court, obtain an order to tax the costs of the trustee's solicitor (v).

5. Unless trustees have been guilty of misconduct, they are entitled to their costs of an action for the administration of the trust as between solicitor and client, and not merely as between party and party (x), and, in addition thereto, any other costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by them in the execution of the trust. Where, however, the court, on the hearing of a summons for administration "does not think fit to make any order as to costs," that is merely a euphemistic way of depriving the trustees of their costs, and they cannot afterwards claim them as "costs, charges, and expenses" (y). To deprive a trustee of his costs, charges, and expenses, has, however, been called "a violent exercise" of the court's discretion. A trustee ought only to be deprived of them for gross misconduct (z); and, contrary to the usual rule of the court, an order depriving a trustee of costs, or limiting him to a particular fund, is appealable by

Art. 64. him on that ground (a), although, if he be allowed costs, the beneficiaries cannot appeal against such allowance (b). Yet a trustee who acts unreasonably may be deprived of costs. For instance, in a recent case, a trustee whose trust had become a simple trust, and who neglected for twenty-eight days after demand to transfer the trust property to the beneficiary, was not only deprived of costs, but ordered to pay those of the plaintiff (c). If trustees are co-plaintiffs or co-defendants, they ought, except under special circumstances, to sue or defend jointly (d), and will only be allowed one set of costs between them (e), to be apportioned by the taxing master (f); and if a trustee improperly refuses to join his co-trustee as plaintiff, and consequently has to be made a defendant, he may be deprived of costs altogether (e). But, on the other hand, where, owing to one trustee being also a beneficiary, it is necessary that one should be plaintiff, and the other defendant, they will each be allowed separate sets of costs as between solicitor and client (g); and the same rule obtains where one of the trustees is attacked hostilely, in which case he may employ two counsel (h).

6. It has been held that a trustee is entitled to be reimbursed costs of former trustees, paid by him to their personal representatives previously to the latter transferring the trust estate (i). He is also entitled to be reimbursed costs incurred by him previously to his appointment, in obtaining a statement of the trust property, and ascertaining that the power of appointing new trustees was being properly exercised (k); and also costs incurred by the donee of the power of appointment in relation to the trustee's appointment (i).

7. But where a trustee takes upon himself the responsibility of defending an action in relation to the trust estate without procuring the sanction of the court, and the defence is unsuccessful, the onus lies upon him of proving that he had reasonable grounds for defending it. If he cannot prove such grounds, he is not entitled to retain out of the trust property the costs of the action beyond the amount which he would have incurred if he had applied for leave to defend (l).

Art. 64.

Expenses incurred in unsuccessfully defending an action.

8. Neither will trustees be allowed to reimburse themselves every out-of-pocket expense, but only such as are reasonable and proper under the circumstances. Thus, where a receiver (who is, of course, a trustee) made several journeys to Paris, in order that he might be present at the hearing of a suit brought in the French courts in relation to the trust property, and it appeared that his presence was wholly needless (the sole question being one of French law, and not of fact), his travelling expenses were disallowed, on the ground that they were, under the circumstances, improperly incurred (m).

Unreasonable expenses disallowed.

9. And so where trustees attempted, at the solicitation of their beneficiaries, some of whom were married women without power of anticipation, to sell the trust property before the date named in the settlement, it was held that they were not entitled to be indemnified against the costs of an action for specific performance brought against them by the purchaser (n).

10. Again, a trustee, although entitled to obtain legal advice in relation to the execution of the trust, is not entitled, out of an excess of caution, to charge the estate with unnecessary legal proceedings. For instance, on retirement, he is not entitled to have an attested copy of the settlement, or of the appointment of new trustees, made at the expense of the estate (o).

1. In an administration action, the costs of all parties were directed to be taxed and paid out of the trust estate, the costs of the trustees to include any charges and expenses properly incurred by them. It subsequently appeared probable that the trust fund would be insufficient for the payment of the whole of the costs in full, and the trustees moved to vary the minutes by the insertion of a direction that if the trust funds were insufficient to pay the whole of the costs, charges, and expenses thereby directed to be taxed and paid, their costs, charges, and expenses should be paid in priority to the costs of the beneficiaries. BACON, V.-C., in giving judgment, said: "It is a good rule that trustees should have a priority for their costs, because, until those costs are provided for, it is impossible to say what the trust fund is. I, therefore, hold that these trustees are entitled to payment of their costs, charges, and expenses, in priority to the costs of all other parties, and the order must therefore be varied accordingly" (p). In short, the trustees' lien takes precedence of all beneficial interests, not only as against original beneficiaries, but also all purchasers or mortgagees claiming through or under them (q). Even where property is settled on a married woman for life, without power of anticipation, and she improperly commences administration proceedings, which are dismissed with costs against her personally, the court may authorise the trustees to recoup themselves out of her life interest (r).

2. One Holden executed a post-nuptial voluntary settlement. He subsequently commenced an action to set it aside, but failed in his contention, the action being dismissed with costs. He then became bankrupt within two years of the date of the settlement, which accordingly became void under s. 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52). It was held that, although the settlement was void, yet as it had originally been valid, but voidable, and as the trustees had incurred costs in the execution of their duty which they could not recover from the bankrupt, they were entitled to be fully indemnified out of the trust funds (s). It would seem, however, that the same principle does not apply to settlements void under the 13th Eliz., c. 5, or to cases where the execution of the settlement was an act of bankruptcy (t).

Art. 64.

3. Where, however, a trustee for purchase has advanced money of his own to enable a particular property to be purchased, the price of which exceeded the whole trust fund, it was held that he had not a first charge on the property for reimbursing himself his advance, but that the beneficiaries had a first charge on the estate for the amount of the trust fund, and that he only had a second charge for the amount of his advance (u). The ratio decidendi in this case would seem to have been, that it was not so much a question of indemnity for costs and expenses incurred in the performance of his duty, as of a gratuitous mixing of his own moneys with the trust moneys; and that this (as will be seen later on (v)) gave the trust estate a first and paramount charge.

Exception where trustee has mixed his money with trust fund.

1. Where the sole object of a suit is to make trustees answerable for breach of trust, and a judgment to that effect is obtained, the trustees will not only not get their costs allowed, but will almost invariably have to pay the costs of the plaintiffs up to the judgment (x); and the costs subsequent to the judgment will be in the discretion of the judge, who may disallow the trustee his costs if he considers that, but for the trustee's misconduct, there would have been no need for the action at all (y). And the same result will follow where the conduct of a trustee is vexatious or

But where an administration suit is necessary apart from the breach of trust, and the latter only forms an incidental feature of the suit, the trustee will, as a rule, be allowed his general costs of the suit as between solicitor and client, although he may have to pay the special costs caused by the breach (b). But he will not be allowed to receive them until he has made good the loss to the estate caused by his breach (c). And, in spite of a decision of the late Vice-Chancellor HALL to the contrary (d), the weight of authority is in favour of applying the same rule to costs incurred by a trustee defendant, even after he may have become bankrupt (e).

Upon the completion of the trust, a trustee is entitled to have his accounts examined and settled by the beneficiaries, and either to have a formal discharge given to him or to have the accounts taken in court. He cannot, however, demand a release under seal (f).

beneficiary, however, refused to give him anything except a simple receipt for the amount of stock actually transferred, which, of course, left it open to him to say that that amount was not the amount to which he was entitled. The court held, that no deed was demandable, but the judge said: "Though it may not have been the right of the trustee to require a deed, I think that it was his right to require that his account should be settled; that is to say that he and his family should be delivered from the anxiety and misery attending unsettled accounts, and the possible ruin, which they who are acquainted with the affairs daily litigated in the Court of Chancery well know to be a frequent result of neglect in such a matter" (g).

2. "In the case of a declared trust, when the trust is apparent on the face of the deed, the fund clear, the trust clearly defined, and the trustee is paying either the income or the capital of the fund, if he is paying it in strict accordance with the trusts, he has no right to require a release under seal. It is true that in the common case of executors, when the executorship is being wound up, it is the practice to give executors a release. An executor has a right to be clearly discharged, and not to be left in a position in which he may be exposed to further litigation; therefore, he fairly says, unless you give me a discharge on the face of it protecting me, I cannot safely hand over the fund; and therefore it is usual to give a release; but such a claim on the part of a trustee would, in strictness, be improper, if he is paying in accordance with the letter of the trust. In such a case he would have no right to a release" (h).

3. Where trust moneys have been re-settled, the trustees or executors of the original settlement or will are, it has been said, entitled to a release under seal from their beneficiaries, though they are entitled only to a mere receipt from the trustees to whom they pay the moneys (i). (1) Trustees may, in cases of doubt as to what course they ought to adopt, safe-guard themselves by taking out an originating summons, returnable in the chambers of a judge of the Chancery Division, for the determination (without general administration by the court) of:—

- (a) any question affecting the rights or interests of the cestuis que trusts (m) ;
- (b) the ascertainment of any class of creditors, legatees, devisees, next of kin, or others (n) ;

Almost any question of construction or administration can now be decided on originating summons, except (1) cases in which it is sought to make trustees responsible for breach of trust, at all events where wilful default is charged (s); or (2) questions affecting a person claiming adversely to the settlement (t); or (3) questions involving the cancellation of instruments (u). To these exceptions was formerly added, questions as to a legal devise (x); but it is apprehended that under R. S. C. 1893, Ord. LIV., such questions can now be dealt with on originating summons. In a recent case where new trustees refused to act until it was determined whether the old ones were liable for a loss, the court on summons declared that the old ones were not liable (y). The reader is referred for other examples of cases decided on originating summons to the Annual Practice, Ord. LV., r. 3.

(a) Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 42. It would seem at first sight that by the operation of sub-s. (6) of s. 25 of the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), these provisions are extended to all constructive trustees, such as insurance companies, etc. But although in one case (Re Haycock, 1 Ch. D. 611) this was held to be so, that view has been twice dissented from (Matthew v. Northern Assurance Co., 9 Ch. D. 80, and Re Sutton, 12 Ch. D. 175). 4. A trustee ought not to hesitate to pay the money to a beneficiary who claims in default of appointment, if he has no notice of any appointment by the donee of the power, and no ground for believing that any appointment has been made. For in that case he could not be made liable if he paid over the fund, even if an appointment were subsequently discovered (i). Anyhow, now, a trustee in such a case would only be allowed the costs of a summons. Payment to one who claims in default of appointment.

5. Where the beneficiary is a married woman, married before 1883, and whose title accrued prior to that date, it has been held that the trustee may pay into court, in order that she may assert her equity to a settlement. But this would not be so in cases to which the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), applies. Payment into court to enable married woman to assert equity to a settlement.

6. Again, where the trustee has a bonâ fide doubt as to the law (k), or has received a bonâ fide claim sanctioned by respectable solicitors (l), he may properly pay the fund into court, unless the question could be settled by summons. Reasonable doubt or claim.

7. But where a beneficiary in reversion who had gone to Australia, and had not been heard of for some years, suddenly reappeared, and there was no reasonable doubt as to his identity, it was held that the trustee was not entitled to pay the trust fund into court, and he was ordered to pay the costs of all parties (m). Undue caution.

8. Lastly, the reader must be warned that now that most questions of doubt or difficulty can be decided on General warning.

It seems matter for regret that those who were responsible for the drafting of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), did not insert some words in s. 42, warning trustees of the danger they run in accepting the apparently unconditional invitation extended to them by the words of that section, an invitation which in most cases can only be accepted at the risk of having to pay costs.

1. With regard to actions for the administration of a trust by the court, such actions are now comparatively rare. Formerly, a decree for general administration (that is to say, a decree whereby the court took upon itself to supervise the execution of the trust) was granted to a trustee or a beneficiary as a matter of course; and the only check upon an abuse of the process of the court, was the rather remote contingency that the trustee might possibly be deprived of his costs, or, in very flagrant cases, have to pay the costs of all parties, upon the action coming on for further consideration. However, by the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, Ord. LV. r. 10, the old practice has been reversed, and now it is no longer obligatory upon the court or a judge to pronounce or make a judgment or order for the administration of any trust, if the questions between the parties can be properly determined on summons without such judgment or order, as mentioned in Article 66. The principles on which the court will, under this new rule, grant or refuse general administration, have been discussed in two cases, one before the late Mr. Justice PEARSON (x), and the other before the Court of Appeal (y), in which the learned Lords Justices were more inclined to restrict the right to a decree than Mr. Justice PEARSON was. Art. 68.

a residuary estate instituted a suit to administer the estate, he had the right to require, and as a matter of course obtained, the full decree for the administration of the estate; and the court, even if it thought that, although there were really questions which required decision, these questions might be decided upon some only of the accounts and inquiries which formed part of the decree, found itself fettered and unable to restrict the accounts and inquiries to such only as were necessary in order to work out the question. Now, however, the practice is laid down by r. 10 of Ord. LV., as follows:—" (His lordship here read the rule and continued) "Where there are questions which cannot properly be determined without some accounts and inquiries or directions which would form part of an ordinary administration decree, then the right of the party to have the decree or order is not taken away, but the court may restrict the order simply to those points which will enable the question which requires to be adjudicated upon, to be settled. That is the result of Ord. LV. r. 10. Then we have Ord. LXV. r. 1, which says, 'subject to the provisions of the Acts and these rules, the costs of and incident to all proceedings in the Supreme Court, including the administration of estates and trusts, shall be in the discretion of the court or judge.' These two rules must be read together, and we then find this: that if a party comes and insists that there is a question to be determined, and, for the purpose of determining that question, asks for an administration judgment, the court cannot refuse the judgment unless it sees that there is no question which requires its decision; but rule 1 of Ord. LXV. puts the party who applies for the judgment and insists upon it in this position—that if it turns out that what has been represented as the substantial question requiring adjudication is one which was not a substantial question, or that the applicant was entirely wrong in his contention as to that particular question, the court can, and, in my opinion, ought ordinarily to make the person who gets the judgment pay the costs of all the proceedings consequent upon his unnecessary, or possibly vexatious, application to the court" (z).

(z) This seems to refer rather to the case of an action commenced by a beneficiary. It requires a very flagrant case to render a trustee liable to pay costs; see p. 323, supra.

2. It will be seen from the above judgment, that now Art. 68. that almost all isolated questions of construction or administrative difficulty can be dealt with singly, very few cases can arise necessitating general administration, except where the trustees cannot pull together, or the circumstances of the estate give rise to ever recurring difficulties requiring the frequent direction of the court, or where a prima facie doubt is thrown on the bona fides, or the discretion of one or more of the trustees. Possibly, also, it would still be held that a trustee would be entitled to a general administration judgment, to relieve him of trouble and annoyance, in a case such as the following, viz., where there were divers disputes as to the proper beneficiaries, out of which disputes several actions had sprung, to all of which the trustee was a necessary defendant (a). For if he brings the money into court under the Act, he still remains a trustee, and though he would be under no liability quoad the fund brought in, he would not be discharged from liability quoad the past income; and, moreover, he must be served with notice of all proceedings under the Act in relation to the fund, and this of necessity would compel him to incur some expense in employing a solicitor.

Deductions
from Lord Justice
judgment.

3. But where there is no dispute respecting the amount of a trust fund, and no justifiable ground for the trustee retiring from his office, the only doubt being as to the proper persons entitled, and the trustee, instead of paying the money into court under the Trustee Act, or issuing an originating summons, institutes a suit for the purpose of having the rights of the beneficiaries declared, he will be allowed such costs only as he would have been entitled to if he had paid the fund into court under the Act (b), or had issued a summons (c).

4. It has also been held that the court will not necessarily order general administration because the testator has directed his trustees to commence an action for it (d).

APPOINTMENT OF A JUDICIAL TRUSTEE.

ART. 69.—Power of Court to Appoint.

(1) Where application is made to the court (a) by or on behalf of the person creating or intending to create a trust (b), or by or on behalf of a trustee or beneficiary, the court may in its discretion appoint a person (called a judicial trustee) to be a trustee of that trust either jointly with any other person, or as sole trustee, and, if sufficient cause is shown, in place of all or any existing trustees (c).

(2) Any fit and proper person nominated in the application may be appointed, and in the absence of such nomination, or if the court disapproves it (d), the official solicitor of the court may be appointed (e). An unofficial judicial trustee must give security (f).

(3) Remuneration may be assigned by the court to the judicial trustee (g).

(4) Once in every year the accounts of a judicial trustee have to be audited by an officer of the court, or a professional accountant appointed by the court (h).

(5) The court may direct an inquiry into the administration of the trust by the judicial trustee (i), and may give any special or general directions in regard to the trust or its administration (k).

(6) In all cases a judicial trustee is to be subject to the control and supervision of the court as an officer thereof (l).

1. This Act was a new departure in English law, founded on the analogy of the law of Scotland, where a "Judicial Factor" has been established for many years. Its object is to give to trust property the same protection as would be given by a general administration order, but at less cost, and without the necessity of making numerous applications to the court. This protection is secured (1) by the appointment of an official, or, (2) in the alternative, of a person who gives security for his honesty, and (3) by having the accounts audited once a year. It does not, however, appear that if an official judicial trustee should commit a breach of trust (innocent or otherwise), the beneficiaries would be indemnified by the government.

2. The power of the court to appoint, is purely discretionary, and will not be exercised, if the application is opposed, where no charge of improper conduct is made against an existing trustee, even where he or she is a sole

3. In compliance with s. 4 of the Act, a code of thirty-five rules was made in 1897, dealing in detail with the appointment of official and non-official judicial trustees, the administration of the trust, the security to be given, the custody of securities and money, accounts and audit remuneration, removal, suspension, resignation and discontinuance of judicial trustees, the communication between judicial trustees and the court, fees and so on. As, however, these rules will be found set out in the "Yearly Practice," it is not thought necessary to call further attention to them here.

ART. 70.—The Measure of the Trustee's Responsibility.

(1) The general measure of a trustee's responsibility for a breach of trust, is the amount by which the trust property has been depreciated without interest (a) : But—

- (b) where he ought (if he had obeyed the trust) to have received interest, whether simple or compound (c), he will be liable to account for what he ought to have received (d) ;
- (c) where the object of the breach was to further his own personal advantage (e), he will be estopped from denying that he actually received interest, and will be liable to pay (semble) simple interest at 3 per cent. But where he has employed the trust property in trade or speculation, he will be liable at the option of the beneficiaries, either to pay compound interest at 5 per cent., with yearly, or even half-yearly, rests, if he may reasonably be presumed to have made that amount, or to account for all the profits made by him (f).

(2) Where a trustee improperly advances trust money on a mortgage security which would at the time of the investment be a proper investment in all respects for a smaller sum than is actually advanced thereon, the security is deemed an authorised investment for the smaller sum, seems to be quite inconsistent with all the other authorities, as the trustee did not receive interest, nor was there any evidence that he ought to have received the rate (5 per cent.) charged against him.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF PARAGRAPH (1).

1. For a good example of the measure of the trustee's liability for disregarding the express directions of the settlement, the reader is referred to Illustration 5 on p. 158, supra. Another (which seldom occurs now) happens where trustees are expressly directed to invest in particular securities (e.g., British Government funds), and, instead of doing so, retain the money in their hands. In such cases the beneficiaries may elect either to claim the money itself, or the amount of Government stock which the trustees might have purchased therewith at the date when they ought to have made the investment (h). However, where trustees have a choice of investments, it is obvious that the same rule cannot apply, because it would be impossible to say which of them they would have chosen if they had exercised their discretion. In such cases, therefore, the beneficiaries are only entitled to the money with interest at 3 (i) per cent. (k).

2. The trustee of gas shares allowed the husband of one of the beneficiaries to get them into his hands. The husband surrendered them to the company, accepting allotments of new shares in their stead, on which new shares he paid calls, and finally became bankrupt. On these facts, it was held that the trustee was only liable for the value of the shares, less the calls paid by the husband, that being the true measure of the loss to the trust (l).

(g) Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 9. This section applies to investments made as well before as after the commencement of the Act, except where an action or other proceeding was pending with reference thereto, on December 24th, 1888. Prior to the latter date the trustee had to take over the mortgage and to pay the actual money invested.

Cases where there must always have been a loss.

3. So, where there must always have been a loss on the realisation of trust property, apart from any breach of trust, then if a breach of trust further depreciates it, the measure of the trustee's responsibility is confined to the further depreciation, and he is not responsible for the difference between the nominal value and the actual amount realised (m).

A trustee who is guilty of unreasonable delay in investing trust funds will be answerable to the beneficiaries for simple interest at 3 (n) per cent. during the continuance of such delay (o); for if he had done his duty, interest would in fact have been received.

Duty to accumulate.

1. On the same ground, where an executrix allowed trust money to remain uninvested in her solicitor's hands for nine years during the infancy of the beneficiary, she was charged with compound interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, with half-yearly rests, as it was her duty to have accumulated the income, by investing it from time to time in consols (p). And à fortiori is this the case where there is an express trust for accumulation (n).

Improper calling in of good security.

2. A trustee who, without proper authority, calls in trust property invested on mortgage at 5 per cent., would be liable for that rate of interest; for although he may not actually have received that rate, he ought to have done so (q).

ILLUSTRATIONS OF SUB-PARAGRAPH (c).

1. A trustee retained trust funds uninvested for several years, and mixed them with his own private moneys, but did not trade or speculate with them, or get any personal benefit from them. Lord CRANWORTH, in delivering judgment, said: "Generally speaking, every executor and trustee who holds money in his hands is bound to have that money forthcoming; he is, therefore, chargeable with interest, and is almost always to be charged with interest at 4 (r) per cent. It is presumed that he must have made interest, and 4 per cent. is that rate of interest which this court has usually treated it as right to charge." His lordship then commented on the misconduct attributed to the trustee, and proceeded as follows: "It is not misconduct that has benefited him, unless indeed it can be taken as evidence that he kept the money fraudulently in his hands, meaning to appropriate it. In such a case, I think the court would be justified in dealing, in point of interest, very hardly with an executor, because it might fairly infer that he used the money in speculation, by which he either did make 5 per cent., or ought to be estopped from saying that he did not. The court would not inquire what had been the actual proceeds, but in application of the principle, in odium spoliatoris omnia præsumuntur, would assume that he did make the higher rate, that is, if that were a reasonable presumption" (s).

2. In Burdick v. Garrick (t), a solicitor, as the agent of the plaintiff, held a power of attorney from him, under the authority of which he received divers sums of money, and paid them into the bank to the credit of his (the solicitor's) firm. On a bill being filed by the client for an account, the Vice-Chancellor made a decree for payment of the principal with compound interest. The Court of Appeal, however, reversed this decision, Lord HATHERLEY saying: "The Art. 70. Vice-Chancellor has directed interest to be charged at the rate of 5 per cent., which appears to me to be perfectly right, and for this reason, that the money was retained in the defendants' own hands, and was made use of by them. That being so, the court presumes the rate of interest made upon money to be the ordinary rate of interest, viz., 5 (u) per cent. I cannot, however, think the decree correct in directing half-yearly rests, because the principle laid down in the case of the Attorney-General v. Alford appears to be the sound principle, namely, that the court does not proceed against an accounting party by way of punishing him for making use of the plaintiff's money, by directing rests, or payment of compound interest, but proceeds upon this principle, that either he has made, or has put himself into such a position that he is presumed to have made, 5 per cent., or compound interest, as the case may be." His lordship then pointed out that no doubt where a trustee employs money in ordinary trade, he will be made liable for compound interest, because trade capital is presumed to yield it; but that that reason had no application to capital employed in a solicitor's business, upon which a solicitor is frequently receiving no interest at all.

Partner-trustee allowing trust fund to remain in business.

3. In order to charge a trustee with compound interest, or with actual profits for employing the trust funds in trade, there must be an active calling in of the trust moneys for the purpose of embarking them in the trade or speculation; a mere neglect to withdraw funds already embarked by the settlor in the trustee's trade, is not sufficient (v).

Liability for loss caused by insufficient mortgage security.

1. Prior to the Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), where a trustee invested the trust fund on mortgage, and advanced more than two-thirds of the value, that prima facie constituted the entire investment a breach of trust. It was not an investment which the trustee ought to have made at all, and consequently having, by making it, committed a breach of trust, the whole item—the entire sum so invested—was disallowed him in his accounts, and the mortgage was either realized and he was charged with the actual deficiency, or (at all events where the security was wholly unauthorised and not merely deficient (x)) he was directed to replace the entire sum, and upon doing so the mortgage became his absolutely (y). Consequently, although a trustee might only have erred in advancing, say one-eighth more than two-thirds of the value, he thereby became liable to repay to the estate the whole of the amount invested, recouping himself so far as possible out of the mortgage. But although this is still the rule with regard to securities generally, it is no longer so with regard to mortgage securities where the only breach of trust was that too much was advanced. In such cases s. 9 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), (re-enacting s. 5 of the Act of 1888) provides, that where the mortgage security “would at the time of the investment be a proper investment in all respects for a smaller sum,” he will only be liable for the excess over that smaller sum, although that may not represent the loss to the estate. A trustee is not, however, protected by this enactment unless the investment was a proper one in all other respects than value (z); and, consequently, in cases where he ought not to have invested on the security of such property at all (e.g., where he has invested on mortgage of leaseholds, or of trade property, or wasting property, such as mines or brickfields or the like), a trustee will still be liable for the entire sum invested. And where in such a case the trustee in fault retires, the new trustees need not put him to his election to take over the security, but may realize the security without notice to him, and charge him with the entire deficiency (a).

2. This, however, is not so where the security is one of a class not authorised at all. In such cases, unless the

to breach are equally liable.

All parties to a breach of trust are equally liable, and there is between them no primary liability (f); and this liability is not confined to express trustees, but extends to all who are actually privy to the breach of trust. Thus, where trustees delegated their trusteeship to their solicitors, who received the moneys, and did not invest them, but made use of them in their business, it was held that both the trustees and the solicitors were equally liable, and that judgment might be levied by the beneficiaries against the solicitors only (g). This principle does not, however, apply to professional payments made by trustees to a solicitor or other agent who knows that the money is trust money, unless facts are brought home to him which show that, to his knowledge, the money was being applied in a manner inconsistent with the trust; or, in other words, that the solicitor or other agent was party either to a fraud, or to a breach of trust on the part of the trustees. As Mr. Justice STIRLING put it in a recent case: "To make an agent liable to return costs, he must be fixed with notice that, at the time when he accepted payment, the trustee had been guilty of a breach of trust such as would preclude him altogether from resorting to the trust estate for payment of costs, so that in fact the application of the trust estate in payment of costs would be a breach of trust" (h).

ART. 72.—No Set-off allowed of Gain on one Breach against Loss on another.

A trustee is only liable for the actual loss in each distinct and complete transaction which amounts to a breach of trust, and not for the loss in each particular item of it (i); but a loss in one transaction or fund is not compensated by a gain in another and distinct one (k).

1. In Vyse v. Foster (i), a testator devised his real and personal estates upon common trusts for sale, making them a mixed fund. His trustees were advised that a few acres of freehold land which belonged to him might be advantageously sold in lots for building purposes, and that, to develop their value, it was desirable to build a villa upon part of them. They accordingly built one at a cost of £1,600 out of the testator's personal estate. The evidence showed that the outlay had benefited the estate, but Vice-Chancellor BACON disallowed the £1,600 to the trustees in passing their accounts. The Court of Appeal (and subsequently the House of Lords), however, reversed this, the Lord Justice JAMES saying: "As the real and personal estate constituted one fund, we think it neither reasonable

Loss on one transaction cannot be set-off against gain on another.

2. In Wiles v. Gresham (l), on the other hand, by the negligence of the trustees of a marriage settlement, a bond debt for £2,000 due from the husband was not got in, and was totally lost. Certain other of the trust funds were without proper authority invested in the purchase of land upon the trusts of the settlement. The husband, out of his own money, greatly added to the value of this land; and upon a claim being made against the trustees for the £2,000 they endeavoured to set-off against that loss the gain which had accrued to the trust by the increased value of the land, but their contention was disallowed, the two transactions being separate and distinct.

3. Again, trustees had kept invested on unauthorised security a sum of money which they ought to have invested in consols, and which was in consequence depreciated. Eventually part of the money was invested in consols, at a far lower rate than it would have been if invested according to the directions in the will. The trustees claimed to set-off the gain against the loss, but were not allowed to do so; because "at whatever period the unauthorised security was realised, the estate was entitled to the whole of the consols that were then bought, and if it was sold at a later period than it ought to have been, the executor was not entitled to any accidental advantage thence accruing" (m). This case is at first sight difficult to be distinguished from Vyse v. Foster, but it will be perceived that the loss and gain resulted from two distinct transactions. The loss resulted from a breach of trust in not realising the securities, the gain arose from a particular kind of stock being at a lower market value than usual at the date at which the trustees bought it; still it may be reasonably doubted whether it would be followed at the present day.

4. Where, however, trustees committed a breach of trust in lending trust moneys on mortgage, and upon a suit by them the mortgaged property was sold, and the money paid into court, and invested in consols pending the suit, and the consols rose in value, the trustees were allowed to set-off the gain in the value of the consols against the loss under the mortgage, for the gain and loss arose out of one transaction (n). It is, however, very difficult to reconcile this case with the last one, but it seems to be reasonable and in accordance with common sense.

ART. 73.—Property acquired either wholly or partly out of Trust Property becomes liable to the Trust.

(1) If a trustee has, in breach of trust, converted trust property into some other form, the property into which it has been so converted, becomes subject to the trust. If all the beneficiaries are sui juris, they can collectively elect to adopt the breach, and take the property as it then stands; but if one of them objects to do so, he may require it to be reconverted, and in that case any gain accrues to the trust estate, and any loss falls on the trustee (o).

(2) If a trustee has mixed trust moneys with his own, or has, partly with his own and partly with trust moneys, purchased other property, then the beneficiaries cannot elect to take the

1. Thus, where money is handed to a broker for the purpose of purchasing stock, and he invests it in unauthorised stock, and absconds, the stock which he has purchased will belong to the principal, and not to the broker's trustee in bankruptcy. For a broker is a constructive trustee for his principal, and, as was said by Lord ELLENBOROUGH, "the property of a principal, entrusted by him to his factor for any special purpose, belongs to the principal, notwithstanding any change which that property may have undergone in form, so long as such property is capable of being identified and distinguished from all other property" (q).

2. So, if goods consigned to a factor be sold by him and reduced into money, yet if the money can be traced—as, for instance, where it has been kept separate and apart from the factor's own moneys, or kept in bags, or the like (r), or has been changed into bills or notes (s), or into any other form (t), or has been paid into the factor's account at the bank (u)—the employer, and not the creditors of the factor, will, upon his bankruptcy, be entitled to the property into which it has been converted. For the creditors of a defaulting trustee can have no better right to the trust property than the trustee himself; and it makes no difference in this respect that the trustee committed a breach of trust in converting the property; for an nor on those claiming through him (x).

3. So, where the trustees of a will invested trust moneys in an unauthorised purchase of land, and afterwards contracted to sell it for a largely increased price, it was held that they were acting properly in so doing, and that the concurrence of one beneficiary was sufficient to make a good title, on the purchasers seeing that the purchase-money was invested in the names of the trustees as trustees (y). For, as Mr. Justice PEARSON put it: "I see no reason why the trustees should not now do what it was all along their duty to do, and what the court would have ordered them to do. At the same time, I agree that it would be proper to take the concurrence of one of the cestuis que trusts, because, if all of them elected to take their shares of the land after it had been purchased, they would have been entitled to do so; but if one of them objected to take the land, but required that it should be sold, then the others could not compel him to take his share of the land as representing his share of the money."

1. The case is comparatively simple where (as in the foregoing illustrations) the trustee has spent or converted the trust property, and nothing but the trust property. It, however, becomes more difficult when the trustee has mixed the trust moneys with his own, and either kept the mixed fund, or spent it in the purchase of other property. The case then turns entirely upon the question, whether the mixed fund, so formed, can be identified, or, if it has been spent, whether it can be traced into the property which has been purchased with it. If it has become so mixed up with the trustee's private property as to render it impossible to trace it (for instance, where it has been converted into money, which has been put into circulation (z), or has otherwise become indistinguishable), then, as the right of the beneficiary is only to have the actual trust property or that which stands in its place, or to have a charge on it, and as the actual property is gone, and that which stands in its place cannot be identified, the beneficiary can only proceed against the trustee personally for the breach of trust, or, if the latter be bankrupt, can only prove as a creditor (a).

2. But where the mixed fund can be traced (as, for instance, where the trustee has paid in the trust fund to his general banking account (b)), the beneficiaries will have a charge, or lien, upon the whole mixed fund. In the case of Re Hallett, Knatchbull v. Hallett (b), the late Sir GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., elaborately reviewed all the authorities touching on this question. His lordship said: "Supposing the trust money was 1,000 sovereigns, and the trustee put them into a bag, and by mistake, or accident, or otherwise, dropped a sovereign of his own into the bag? I do not like to call it a charge of 1,000 sovereigns on the 1,001 sovereigns, but that is the effect of it. I have no doubt of it. It would make no difference if, instead of one sovereign, it was another 1,000 sovereigns. But if, instead of putting it into his bag, or after putting it into his bag, he carries the bag to his bankers, what then? According to law, the bankers are his debtors for the total amount; but if you lend the trust money to a third person you can follow it. If in the case supposed the trustee had lent the £1,000 to a man without security, you could follow the debt and take it from the debtor. . . . If instead of lending the whole amount in one sum simply, he had added a sovereign, or had added £500 of his own to the £1,000, the only difference is this, that instead of taking the debt, the cestuis que trusts would have a charge for the amount of the trust money on the debt."

credit of the broker. All moneys in the bank to the broker's credit, were, in fact, moneys received for clients. Since money of a client had been paid in, drawings out in excess of the then balance had been made. And so in the case of another client. Except those two, there was no client who claimed any part of the fund:—Held, on appeal, that as no part of the moneys in the bank was the debtor's own, the judgment creditor had no right against the balance (c). Where, however, a trustee has overdrawn his banking account, his bankers have a first and paramount lien on all moneys paid in if they have no notice that they are trust moneys (d); for where the equities are equal the law prevails, and, in the case supposed, the bankers have in point of law received the money in payment of their debt.

4. Again, trustees had power, with the consent of the tenant for life, to sell the trust property, and they were directed to invest the purchase-money in the purchase of other real estate, to be settled on the like trusts. The trust property was sold under this power for £8,440, and the tenant for life was allowed (wrongly) to keep the purchase-money. About the same time he purchased another estate for £17,400, of which sum £8,124 was part of the above-mentioned trust money. This estate was conveyed to him in fee simple. The tenant for life ultimately became bankrupt, and it was held that, as against his assignees in bankruptcy, the original trustees of the settlement had a lien on the estate which he had purchased, to the extent of the moneys invested in its purchase (e).

5. However, wherever the trustee has mixed the trust fund with his own moneys, then, before a charge or lien can be substantiated, it must be shown that the trust fund

Where, therefore, it appeared that the actual bank notes, of which the trust fund consisted, had not been paid by the trustee into his banking account, it was held that the cestuis que trusts had no lien on the balance lying at the trustee's bankers, because the trust fund could not be traced to the bank (f). Of course, if the trust fund could have been proved to have been paid into the trustee's account, then, notwithstanding that he might subsequently have drawn out and paid in moneys, the lien would have been upheld.

Trustee will be ordered to renew leases.

3. In Earl Talbot v. Scott (p), lands were vested in trustees by Act of Parliament, upon trust for sale, and subject thereto, upon trusts inalienably annexing the rents to the Earldom of Shrewsbury. The Earl of Shrewsbury attempted to disentail (which of course he could not do effectually), and devised the lands to the same trustees, upon trust for a particular claimant of the title. The trustees accepted this trust, and claimed to receive the rents in that character, pending proceedings by the plaintiff to establish his claim to the earldom. A receiver of the rents was, however, appointed on his application, upon the ground that the trusts of the will were in conflict with the prior trusts upon which they held the estate. The court will appoint a receiver and grant an injunction where, from the character or condition of the trustee, he is not a fit person to have the control of the trust property; as, for instance, where he is insolvent (q), or about to become bankrupt (r), or is a person of dissolute habits, or dishonest (s). A trustee who fraudulently appropriates or disposes of the trust property, in any manner inconsistent with the trust, is guilty of a misdemeanour, and is liable to a maximum punishment of seven years penal servitude; but no criminal proceedings can be instituted without the sanction of the Attorney or Solicitor-General, or (if civil proceedings have been commenced) of the judge of the court wherein they have been commenced (x). ART. 76.—General Protection where they have acted Reasonably and Honestly.

If it appears to the court that a trustee (a) is or may be personally liable for any breach of trust, but has acted honestly and reasonably, and ought fairly to be excused for the breach or for omitting to obtain the directions of the court in the matter in which he committed such breach, then the court may relieve him, either wholly or partly, from personal liability for the same (b). The onus of proving honesty and reasonableness is cast upon the trustee (c), and depends on the circumstances of each case, no general principle or rule being possible (d).

Art. 76. It is not confined to judicial trustees, but is equally applicable to all trustees, and is retrospective (e). It will be perceived that two circumstances must co-exist to entitle a trustee to the benefit of the section, viz., he must have acted (1) honestly, and (2) reasonably. Honest folly is not excused (f).

Examples of
conduct.

2. Thus, where the breach of trust consists in investing the trust funds upon insufficient mortgage security, prima facie the requirements of s. 8 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), as to the employment of an independent surveyor constitute a standard by which the reasonable conduct is to be judged, although non-compliance with those requirements is not necessarily a fatal obstacle to an application for relief; it is also a matter of consideration whether the trustee would have acted in the same way if he had been lending money of his own. Where, therefore, the trustee acted on the valuation of a valuer employed by the solicitor who acted for the mortgagors also, and the valuation in one case merely stated the amount for which the property was a good security, without stating the value of the property itself, and in another, although the value was stated, the sum advanced exceeded two-thirds of that value, it was held that no relief could be given to the trustee (g).

3. So, again, it has been held that a trustee does not act reasonably (however honest he may have been) in allowing his co-trustee to receive trust money without inquiry as to its application (h); or in allowing his co-trustee to act without check or inquiry (i), even where he is a solicitor who transacts the trust business (j). However, the above cases and those which follow, must only be taken as examples of the general trend of judicial opinion, as, in the words of BYRNE, J., it is "impossible to lay down any general rules or principles to be acted on in carrying out the provisions of the section, and I think that each case must depend upon its own circumstances " (k). Art. 76.

4. On the other hand, a mistake of law in consequence of which leaseholds were sold, although there was no power of sale, has been held to be reasonable and excusable (l); and so has the payment by executors to their solicitor of money for the specific purpose of paying debts and administration expenses which the solicitor misappropriated (m). Wilful default in not suing a debtor to the estate has been excused where the trustee had reasonable grounds for believing that proceedings would have been ineffectual (n), and also where the debt was small, and he reasonably believed that the debtor was a man of good credit, and that having regard to the testator's will, he was not bound to take proceedings (o). Examples of

5. So where a testator left an estate of £22,000, and it appeared that his debts only amounted to £100 or so, it was held that the executor acted reasonably in paying the widow an immediate legacy of £300, and in permitting her (under the trusts of the will) to receive so much of the income of the estate as was necessary for the maintenance of herself and family, before advertising for claims, although it subsequently turned out that there was a large claim for fraudulent misappropriation of rents received and not accounted for by the testator, which caused his estate to be insolvent (p). But the executor was not excused for allowing the widow to take the income after the claimant had issued his writ; and, apparently, the learned judge (ROMER, J.) felt considerable doubts as to whether he ought to have excused payment of income after the executor had notice of the claim.

(2) No beneficiary, as against whom there would be a good defence by virtue of this section, shall derive any greater or other benefit from a judgment or order obtained by another beneficiary than he could have obtained if he had brought such action or other proceeding and this section had been pleaded.

The above article, which is a reprint of s. 8 (1), (2), of the Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), has completely revolutionised the law, but it is unfortunately by no means free from ambiguity. Indeed, it is extremely difficult to understand what paragraph (a) of sub-s. (1) was aimed at. It could not have been aimed at claims for the recovery of land or other property, or the proceeds thereof retained by the trustee personally, because such claims are expressly excluded. Nor could it have been aimed at claims against purchasers from the trustee with notice of a breach of trust, because such claims are already provided for by s. 25 of 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 28. Nor, it is conceived, could it have been intended to apply to actions for what may be called negligent breaches of trust, or breaches arising from mistake or the like, because such actions are for equitable wrongs sui generis arising neither out of tort or contract, and not falling within the provisions of any existing Statute of Limitations (t); indeed, such claims are obviously intended to be provided for by paragraph (b). The conundrum

(s) As to when the statute begins to run in cases where the plaintiff has always been in possession, but acquires a new title, see Mara v. Browne, [1895] 2 Ch. 69, sed quære. Although this case was subsequently reversed ([1896] 1 Ch. 199), it was on another point.

(t) See Re Bowden, Andrew v. Cooper, 45 Ch. D. 444.

Art. 77. proved too tough for Sir EDWARD FRY (u), but the Court of Appeal grappled with it in the subsequent case of How v. Earl Winterton (x), and expressed an opinion that there might be cases (such as a claim for an account) where the old statutes of limitation applied unless the claim was against a trustee; and RIGBY, L.J., hinted that where the trust was created by deed executed by the trustee, there might possibly be an action on the implied covenant by him to perform the trust, which would only be barred after twenty years.

Failure to convert according to imperative direction.

1. Trustees, in breach of trust, carried on a testator's business until the youngest child attained twenty-one in the year 1882, when they sold everything, and divided the proceeds between all the children. In 1890, one of these children commenced an action seeking to make the trustees liable for a loss incurred through carrying on the business. It was held, however, that it was not an action for a legacy to which twelve years was a bar under 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, s. 8, but an action for breach of trust to which no existing statute of limitations applied prior to 1889, and that, consequently, under the Act of 1888, s. 8 (1) (b), the lapse of six years was a bar (y).

The whole fund expended in maintenance.

2. Where property was held in trust for an infant on attaining twenty-one (which he did in 1880), and in 1892 he sued the trustee for an account, and the trustee deposed that he had (which was not contradicted) expended the entire fund in the maintenance and education of the infant, it was held that the Act of 1888 barred any claim to an account or other relief (z).

Mortgage of insufficient value.

3. In August, 1878, trustees committed an innocent breach of trust, by investing on mortgage of property of insufficient value. The mortgagee paid interest direct to the tenant for life until 1890. In 1892, the tenant for life and infant remainderman brought an action to compel the trustees to make good the amount invested, and it was conceded that, quâ the remainderman, they had no defence. It was, however, held, that, quâ the tenant for life, his right to complain was barred at the expiration of six years from the date of the investment, that being the date of the breach of trust (a). Art. 77.

4. The Act is applicable to a claim for accounts to the extent that the plaintiff cannot pick holes in the account for more than six years before action (b). Applicable to a claim for accounts.

5. Where a husband forcibly deprived a wife of a legacy given to her for her separate use, and retained it until his death, it was held that her executors could not plead the statute in answer to an action by the wife. For the husband took the property with notice of the trust affecting it, and was, therefore, an express trustee (c). Defendant retaining the trust property cannot plead the statute.

6. The statute affords no defence to an action against a firm of solicitors who have falsely told their client that money which he had intrusted to them for investment had been, in fact, invested on mortgage, the truth being that a clerk of the solicitors had embezzled it (d). Statute has no application where there has been a false statement made.

7. The exceptions in s. 8 of the Act of 1888, do not prevent a trustee having the benefit of the statute, because the trust fund advanced on an insufficient security was, in fact, applied by the borrower in payment of a debt to his bankers, of whom the trustee was one (e). How far the Act applies where trustee has remotely benefited by breach.

8. The statute is none the less applicable because the money has been embezzled, and is retained by one who was the trustee's agent (f). Embezzlement by trustee's agent.

Art. 77.

How far statute applicable to

9. It has been held that trustees of a void charitable conveyance, if in possession for twelve years, gain a title by the ordinary Statute of Limitations, on the ground that the express trust was illegal, and that the resulting trust, although discoverable on the face of the settlement, was inconsistent with it (g).

Resulting trust depending on absence of express trust.

10. But on the other hand, in Patrick v. Simpson (h), where there was a resulting trust depending, not on the illegality, but on the absence of an express trust, it was held that the trustee could not retain the property and plead the statute.

Other con-
trusts.

11. However, a resulting or other constructive trust depending upon evidence outside the written instrument, was always within the Statutes of Limitation (i). Therefore, a tenant for life of leaseholds who renews in his own name (k), or a mortgagee in possession (even although the mortgage be in the form of a trust (l)), is entitled to plead the statute and keep the property.

Trust
apparently constructive, but really express.

12. But, although as a general rule, constructive trustees can avail themselves of the statute while keeping the property for their own benefit, the mere fact that a person is called an agent instead of a trustee, does not confer on him the statutory protection accorded to constructive trustees, if he was, in fact, expressly trusted with money or property for a particular purpose; for in that case he becomes an express trustee (m).

Charges.

13. Simple charges are expressly provided for by the old statute (n). Where, however, a charge is so coupled with a trust as to be in reality a trust itself, the old statutes did not apply. For instance, where a testator charged his property with payment of his debts, and imposed an obligation on the devisee to exert himself actively in paying the

(1) A trustee is not answerable for the receipts, acts, or defaults of his co-trustee (p), save only—

- (a) where he has handed the trust property to him without seeing to its proper application;
- (b) where he allows him to receive the trust property without making due inquiry as to his dealing with it (q);
- (c) where he becomes aware of a breach of trust, either committed or meditated, and abstains from taking the needful steps to obtain restitution and redress, or to prevent the meditated wrong (r).

(2) Even in the above three cases he may, by express declaration in the settlement, be made irresponsible (s).

trustees, declared that each of them should be answerable only for losses arising from his own default, and not for involuntary acts or for the acts or defaults of his co-trustees; and particularly, that any trustee who should pay over to his co-trustees, or should do or concur in any act enabling his co-trustees to receive any moneys for the general purposes of her will, should not be obliged to see to the due application thereof, nor should such trustee be subsequently rendered liable by any express notice or intimation of the actual misapplication of the same moneys. The three trustees joined in signing and giving receipts to two insurance companies for two sums of money paid by them, but two of the trustees permitted their co-trustee to obtain the money without ascertaining whether he had invested it. This trustee having misapplied it, it was sought to make his co-trustees responsible; but Lord WESTBURY held that they were not, saying: "There are three modes in which a trustee would become liable according to the ordinary rules of law—first, where, being the recipient, he hands over the money without securing its due application; secondly, where he allows a co-trustee to receive money without making due inquiry as to his dealing with it; and thirdly, where he becomes aware of a breach of trust, either committed or meditated, and abstains from taking the needful steps to obtain restitution or redress. The framer of the clause under examination knew these three rules, and used words sufficient to meet all these cases. There remained, therefore, only personal misconduct, in respect of which a trustee acting under this will would be responsible. He would still be answerable for collusion if he handed over trust money to his co-trustee with reasonable ground for believing or suspecting that that trustee would commit a breach of trust; but no such case as this was made by the bill."

2. In the recent case of Pass v. Dundas (u), the settlement contained a similar protective clause to that stated in the last illustration. Part of the trust estate consisted of a business, and one of the trustees authorised his co-trustee to draw money out of the bank for the purposes of the business, which money the co-trustee misapplied. It was held that, under the words of the clause, the trustee was protected.

ART. 79.—Concurrence of or Release by the Beneficiaries.

A beneficiary who has assented to, or concurred in, a breach of trust (x), or who has subsequently released or confirmed it (y), or even acquiesced in it, cannot afterwards charge the trustees with it: Provided—

- (a) that the beneficiary was sui juris at the date of such assent or release (z) ;

(c) that no undue influence was brought to bear upon him to extort the assent or release (d).

Distinction between right to plead concurrence and the right to indemnity.

The reader must carefully distinguish between the rules stated in the present article, and those stated in Art. 80, infra. The present article relates exclusively to the circumstances under which a trustee may plead concurrence or assent, by way of defence to an action by the concurring or assenting beneficiary. Article 80, on the other hand, deals with the question as to the circumstances under which a trustee, who may possibly have no defence to an action for breach of trust, may yet call upon his co-trustee or a concurring or assenting beneficiary to indemnify him against the consequences of the breach.

1. Stock was settled on a married woman for her separate use for life, with a power of appointment by will. The trustees, at the instance of the husband, sold out the stock and paid the proceeds to him. The wife filed a bill to compel the trustees to replace the stock, and obtained a decree, under which the trustees transferred part of the stock into court, and were allowed time to re-transfer the remainder. The wife then died, having by her will appointed the stock to the husband. He then filed a bill against the trustees, claiming the stock under the appointment, and praying for the same relief as his wife might have had. It is needless to say that his claim was promptly rejected (e).

Release.

2. A formal release under seal, or an express confirmation, will, of course, estop a beneficiary from instituting subsequent proceedings; and it would seem that any positive act or expression indicative of a clear intention to waive a breach of trust, will, if supported by valuable consideration (however slight), be equivalent to a release (f).

3. Even before the Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), Art. 79.
 a beneficiary under a declared trust might disentitle himself to relief by acquiescence. Thus A., being greatly in debt, executed a deed of trust for the benefit of his creditors, and among the property was the benefit of a lease for lives, renewable for ever, on which the rent reserved was a high rack rent. The tenant under this lease complained, and the trustee, with the knowledge, but without the consent of A. (but with the consent and approbation of A.'s brother, who had the management of A.'s affairs), accepted a reduced rent. A. complained of the abatement, but took no steps to put an end to it for some years. It was held that after the expiration of the trust, the trustee could not be called upon to make up the deficiency (g). Acquiescence.

4. So where, with full knowledge of a breach of trust, no step was taken for many years, it was held that the beneficiaries had lost their right to make any claim (h).

5. But, although long acquiescence is a bar to relief, the reason for holding so is, that the fact of lying by for a considerable period, is evidence of an intention or election on the part of the beneficiary, not to exercise his strict rights. Consequently, where the circumstances are such as to afford no ground for any such presumption, acquiescence, however long, will be no bar to relief unless the Statute of Limitations is applicable (i), or unless under special circumstances it appears to be for the general convenience that a suit in respect of a long dormant grievance should be disallowed. In that case the court will refuse relief on the ground that "Expedit reipublicæ ut sit finis litium." For instance, where a plaintiff seeks to set aside a purchase obtained from him by his solicitor, a delay of less than twenty years may bar the right to relief, if it would be inconvenient to grant it (k). So where, in an action for an Laches not always a bar.

Infants incapable of release or acquiescence. 1. An infant cannot lose his right to relief, either by concurrence or release; for the law presumes that he has not the requisite discretion to judge.

Married women, how far capable of releasing or acquiescing. 2. Even where a married woman is entitled to the fund for her separate use, either expressly or under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), without restraint or anticipation, the court looks with grave suspicion upon a defence that she has concurred in or assented to a breach of trust, as will be seen infra, p. 380. And where it is not her separate property, of course she can in any event only concur by deed executed with her husband's consent and with all the formalities required by the statutes 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, or 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57, as the case may be. But if she is restrained from alienating or anticipating it (m), she is not competent to consent to, or to release, a breach of trust at all; and her concurrence or release would, at all events before the passing of the Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), afford no protection to the trustee even if the breach had been procured by her fraud (n). However (as will be seen from Article 80, infra), by s. 45 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53) (which re-enacts s. 6 of the Act of 1888), the court may, if it thinks fit, impound the interest of a married woman restrained from alienation, who has instigated, or requested, or consented in writing to a breach of trust, for the purpose of indemnifying the trustee. It is somewhat curious, that although the Act gives the court this discretionary power of indemnifying the trustee, it does not enable the trustee to set up the instigation or consent as a defence. It is couceived, therefore, that if a married woman who comes within the provisions of the above section were to sue a trustee to replace the trust fund, he would have no defence, but should ask by counterclaim to be indemnified out of the lady's interest.

Art. 79.

3. The danger incurred by trustees who listen to the sup-plications of married women who are restrained from anticipation, was very vigorously pointed out by Lord LANGDALE in Tyler v. Tyler (o), in a passage which ought to be learnt by heart by every trustee. "We find," said his lordship,
 "a married woman throwing herself at the feet of the trustee, begging and entreating him to advance a sum of money out of the trust fund, to save her husband and her family from utter ruin, and making out a most plausible case for that purpose. His compassionate feelings are worked upon, he raises and advances the money; the object for which it was given entirely fails, the husband becomes bankrupt, and in a few months the very same woman who induced the trustee to do this, files a bill in the Court of Chancery to compel him to make good that loss to the trust. These are cases which, when they happen, shock everybody's feelings at the time; but it is necessary that relief should be given in such cases, for if relief were not given, and if such rights were not strictly maintained, no such thing as a trust could ever be preserved."

1. Even a release under seal (and a fortiori mere concurrence or subsequent acquiescence) will not avail the trustee unless the beneficiary had full knowledge. Thus a release to a trustee has been set aside after the lapse of more than twenty years, and after the death of the trustee, on evidence of the plaintiff (corroborated by the tenor of the release) that it was executed in error, although no fraud was imputed (p).

Ignorance of beneficiary where he has had the advantage of the breach.

3. But it seems that where a beneficiary has had the advantage of a breach of trust, then notwithstanding his want of knowledge of the breach, he cannot sue the trustee without replacing the amount which he himself has received by reason of the breach. Thus, where part of the proceeds of trust funds misappropriated by a father were made subject to the marriage settlement of his son, a beneficiary in remainder, who was ignorant of the source whence the property proceeded, it was held that the son's representatives were only entitled to have his share of the trust funds replaced after deducting the value of the proceeds settled (r).

Trustee-beneficiary generally bound to indemnify co-trustee to extent of his beneficial interest.

This sub-paragraph is well illustrated by the case of Chillingworth v. Chambers (e). There the plaintiff and defendant, the trustees of a will, had committed breaches of trust by investing on insufficient securities, bearing a high rate of interest, and were declared to be jointly and severally liable to make good the loss to the trust estate. The plaintiff trustee, after some and before others of the investments in question had been made, became also beneficially entitled to a share in the trust estate, as the successor in title of his deceased wife. He claimed to be entitled to contribution from the defendant trustee on the ground that they were both in pari delicto. The court, however, rejected his claim on the ground that the rule as to the right of a trustee to contribution from his co-trustee

(c) It need scarcely be pointed out that the representatives of a deceased trustee are not liable for a breach of trust committed after his death, where he has left the trust fund in a proper state of investment (Re Palk, 41 W. R. 28). Of course, they may be liable where he has not so left it (Gibbins v. Taylor, 22 Beav. 344).

for loss occasioned to the estate by a breach of trust for which both are equally to blame, does not apply where one of them is also a cestui que trust, and has received as between himself and his co-trustee an exclusive benefit by the breach. In that case, the rule to be applied is that under which the share or interest of a cestui que trust who has assented to, and profited by, a breach of trust has to bear the whole loss, and the trustee who is a cestui que trust must therefore indemnify his co-trustee to the extent of his share or interest in the trust estate, and not merely to the extent of the benefit he has received. LINDLEY, M.R., in giving judgment, after quoting previous authorities, said: "These cases are all based on obvious good sense; for if I request a person to deal with my property in a particular way, and loss ensues, I cannot justly throw the blame on him. Whatever our liabilities may be to other people, still, as between him and me, the loss clearly ought to fall on me. Whether I am solely entitled to the property, or have only a share or a limited interest, still the loss which I sustain in respect of my share or interest must clearly be borne by me, not by him."

ILLUSTRATIONS OF PARAGRAPH (1) (b).

1. In Bahin v. Hughes (f), COTTON, L.J., said: "On going into the authorities there are very few cases in which one trustee who has been guilty with a co-trustee of breach of trust, and held responsible, has successfully sought indemnity as against his co-trustee. Lockhart v. Reilly (g) and Thompson v. Finch (h) are the only cases which appear to be reported. Now, in Lockhart v. Reilly, it appears from the report of the case in the Law Journal, that the trustee by whom the loss was sustained had been not only trustee, but had been and was a solicitor, and acting as solicitor for himself and his co-trustee, and it was on his advice that Lockhart had relied in making the investment which gave rise to the action of the cestuis que trust (i). . . . course where one trustee has got the money into his own hands, and made use of it, he will be liable to his co-trustee to give him an indemnity (k). Now I think it wrong to lay down any limitation of the circumstances under which one trustee would be held liable to the other for indemnity, both having been held liable to the cestui que trust; but so far as cases have gone at present, relief has only been granted against a trustee who has himself got the benefit of the breach of trust, or between whom and his co-trustees there has existed a relation, which will justify the court in treating him as solely liable for the breach of trust."

Solicitor-trustee not necessarily liable to indemnify co-trustee.

2. It must not, however, be assumed from the above judgment that a solicitor-trustee who advises the commission of a breach of trust is necessarily bound to indemnify his co-trustees; for where the co-trustee has himself been an active participator in the breach of trust and has not participated in it merely in consequence of the advice and control of the solicitor, he will have no right to be indemnified. Thus, where one of the trustees (a lady) joined in the importunities of her brother, and thus induced her co-trustee (a solicitor) to commit a breach of trust for the brother's benefit it was held that she was not entitled to call upon the solicitor-trustee for an indemnity (l).

Even where trustee incidentally benefits by breach, not always liable to indemnify co-trustee.

3. Although, as stated by Lord Justice COTTON in Bahin v. Hughes (m), where one trustee has got the trust money into his own hands and made use of it, he will in general be liable to indemnify his co-trustee, yet he will not have to do so where his breach of trust is only remotely connected with the loss, unless, of course, he was guilty of actual fraud. Thus, the fact of a borrower of trust funds on insufficient security, repaying out of the money so borrowed a debt due from him to one of the trustees is not, of itself, sufficient to render the trustee so accepting repayment liable, the borrower being under no restriction as to its application (n).

Art. 80.

1. Section 45 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53) (which is set out verbatim in paragraph (2) of the present Article), was apparently intended to give legislative sanction to the former rule of the court with the following slight modifications, viz., to confer on the court power (1) to impound the interest of a married woman although restrained from anticipation, and (2) to extend the relief to cases where the beneficiary has merely passively "consented in writing" to the breach as distinguished from cases where he actively requested or instigated it (o).

Breaches of trust committed at the instigation, or request, or with consent of beneficiaries.

2. In order to make a beneficiary liable under s. 45 of the Act of 1893, he must not only have instigated or requested or consented in writing to the breach, but must also have known the facts which would render what was done a breach of trust. Thus, where a tenant for life undeniably requested trustees to invest the trust fund on a certain security, but it did not appear that he intended to be a party to a breach of trust, and in effect he left it to the trustees to determine whether the security was a proper one for the sum to be advanced, it was held that the trustees could not impound his life interest to make good the breach (p). But if the tenant for life had been proved to have knowingly requested the breach of trust, the decision would (even before the statute) have been otherwise (q).

To render beneficiary liable to indemnify trustee, he must have known that act was a breach of trust.

3. The right of a trustee to impound the interest of beneficiaries who have instigated a breach is, however, only applicable for the purpose of indemnifying him against the claims of other beneficiaries. It does not extend to indemnify him against other losses. Thus, where a trustee subsequently became entitled to share in the trust fund as one of the next of kin of a beneficiary, it was held that he could not call on a beneficiary at whose instigation the breach was committed to indemnify him against loss as such next of kin, even although the beneficiary had given him an express covenant of indemnity (r). It is submitted that the same principle would apply à fortiori to the statutory right, which is not so strong in favour of the trustee as an express covenant.

Guilty knowledge must be conclusively proved in the case of a married woman.

4. In the case of a married woman, the court will require stricter proof of her guilty knowledge than in the case of a man. Even where she was not restrained from anticipation and the charge by way of indemnity was express, and not merely statutory, it was held that her position was very different to that of a male beneficiary, Fry, L.J., saying (s): "Before a trustee can claim the benefit of any charge or right of retainer against the interest of a married woman in the fund, it appears to us to be reasonable that he should show that the charge, or right of retainer, was created by her with a full knowledge of all the circumstances. It is probable that, in the case of a man of full years, the court would presume him so to be acting; but in the case of a feme covert, we do not think the presumption exists in favour of the trustee, whose primary duty it was to protect the fund for her benefit. . . . All the cases in which the separate estate of a married woman has been held to be affected by a breach of trust are, as far as we are aware, cases in which she has been an actual actor in the transaction herself; such are the cases of Crosby v. Church (t), Clive v. Carew (u), and Pemberton v. Gill (x). In no case, so far as we know, has her separate estate been charged on the mere ground of her having acquiesced in or approved of the breach of trust."

Where married woman restrained from alienation.

5. Indeed, where the married woman is restrained from alienation it would seem that the statutory power to the court to impound her interest (which is merely discretionary), will only be exercised in the plainest cases, as, for instance, where she has been guilty of fraud; and never, apparently, where the trustee knew that he was committing a breach of trust and yielded weakly to her solicitations (y). Art. 80.

6. In any case where trustees, at the request of a beneficiary, advance the trust fund to her, with notice that she has settled it by another settlement, they cannot impound her income under such other settlement, because that income is not the interest of a beneficiary in the trust estate of which they are the trustees (z). (1) All persons who knowingly (a) meddle with trust funds, or mix themselves up with a breach of trust, render themselves equally liable with the trustees, both in relation to primary liability, and to the limitation of the right of pleading the statutes of limitation (b).

(2) Where such a person, or a beneficiary who is indebted to the trust estate (c), has a partial equitable interest in the trust property, whether original or derivative (d), it may be impounded to make good his liability to the trust estate, not only as against him personally (e), but as

2. A testator bequeathed a sum of £600 (which he described as being in the hands of one Gregory, to whom he had lent the same on the security of his note of hand), to his son-in-law Rolfe, upon certain trusts. Rolfe, the trustee, became indebted to Gregory, and in order to discharge part of that debt he delivered to Gregory the note of hand for £600. It was held that as Gregory had information of the manner of the bequest he was a party to the fraudulent abstraction of the trust property, and liable to refund the amount, and that being founded on fraud, the Statute of Limitations did not apply (l).

3. So, where a fund was standing to the account of two trustees in the books of some bankers, who had notice that it was a trust fund, and, by the direction of the tenant for life only, they transferred it to his account, and thereby obtained payment of a debt due from him to them, it was held that the trustees might sue the bankers to have the trust fund replaced, and that the Statute of Limitations was not applicable (m).

It was held that William Knibb, who had produced the certificate, must be made responsible for the money as well as the trustees.

de son tort.

5. In general, beneficiaries may proceed against an agent of their trustee where he has not confined himself to the duties of an agent (o), but, by accepting a delegation of the trust (p), or by fraudulently mixing himself up with a breach of trust, he has himself become a trustee by construction of equity (q). It is, however, essential to the character of a trustee de son tort, that he should have trust property either actually vested in him, or so far under his control, that he is in a position to require that it should be vested in him (r). For instance, solicitors who prepare deeds relating to contemplated technical breaches of trust but advise against their execution, are not liable if they have no reason to suspect dishonesty (s). But where the capital of a trust fund having got into the hands of the trustee's solicitor, was, through his intervention, spent by the trustee, the solicitor was held liable (t); for where trust funds come into the custody and under the control of a solicitor, or indeed of anyone else, with notice of the trusts, he can only discharge himself of liability by showing that the property was duly applied in accordance with the trusts (u). It is not sufficient, for example, to show that the solicitor invested it by the direction of the trustees in an unauthorised (as distinguished from an insufficient (x)) investment (u), nor that he paid it to one of several trustees who misappropriated it (y); nor that by the direction of the trustee he paid it to a person to whom he knew it was not payable (z), for all of these acts are clear infringements of the trust, as a solicitor ought to be well aware. Of course, however, a solicitor would be justified in paying, and indeed would be compellable to pay, it to the whole of the trustees jointly.

Art. 81.

6. If a solicitor, knowing that money which is in court belongs to one person, commences proceedings in the name of another, and obtains payment to such other, he is personally chargeable with the amount. Nay, even if he has not actual knowledge of the falseness of the claim, but has knowledge of circumstances which, if duly considered, would lead to a knowledge of the truth, he will be made personally responsible for the loss which his want of consideration may cause (a).

ILLUSTRATIONS OF PARAGRAPH (2).

Where party who has joined in breach is a partial beneficiary.

1. As stated in the second paragraph of the present article, the equitable interest of a partial beneficiary who has made himself liable by joining in a breach of trust, may be stopped at the instance of his co-beneficiaries, until the whole loss to the estate has been compensated. This right of the beneficiaries must not, however, be confused with the limited right of the trustee (treated of in Article 80, supra) to impound the interest of a beneficiary who has requested, instigated, or consented in writing to a breach of trust, by way of indemnifying the trustee himself. The two rights are essentially different, and it is apprehended that beneficiaries might have the right referred to in paragraph 2 of the present article, in cases where the trustee (who is after all particeps criminis) might be refused the right of impounding the interest of the instigating beneficiary. It must also be understood that the rule laid down in paragraph 2 of the present article, applies a fortiori to the case of a beneficiary who is also a trustee; for the liability of the beneficiary is really founded upon his having made himself a trustee de son tort. In both cases the trustee, or trustee de son tort, is personally liable, and in both cases in his capacity of beneficiary he must make good his indebtedness to the trust estate before he can claim to share in it (c).

Retainer of life income to make good breach instigated by tenant for life.

2. A trustee, in breach of trust, lent the trust fund to A. B., the tenant for life. The trustee afterwards concurred in a creditor's deed, by which A. B.'s life interest was to be applied in payment of his debts, and the trustee received thereunder a debt due to him from A. B. Before the other creditors had been paid, the trustee retained the life income to make good the breach of trust. It was held that the court would not restrain the trustee from making good the breach of trust out of the life income; for although the trustee, being a creditor and party to the deed, had, quod himself, no right to retain the life interest, yet, as representing the cestuis que trusts, he was justified in doing so (d).

Art. 81.

3. The rule applies not only to shares taken directly under the settlement creating the trust, but also to shares purchased from or otherwise derived through or under immediate beneficiaries. Thus, where a Mrs. D., who was trustee and life tenant under a will, took assignments from two of the beneficiaries entitled in remainder, and committed divers breaches of trust which only came to light on her death, it was held that the two shares which she had purchased were liable to make good the loss to the estate. Moreover, this right of the beneficiaries was held to take priority over persons to whom Mrs. D. had mortgaged the shares in question (e). The fact that the mortgagees were bonâ fide mortgagees for value without notice was immaterial, because the equitable interest in question was a chose in action, and purchasers of choses in action take subject to all equities. Indeed, so far has this been carried, that such purchasers have been held to take subject to breaches of trust committed subsequent to the purchase (f).

Rule applies to derivative as well as to original shares.

4. The rule now under consideration is not confined to cases of breach of trust, but is equally applicable where a beneficiary is indebted to the trust estate. By a separation deed, after reciting that the husband and wife had agreed to live apart, the husband assigned certain leaseholds to trustees in trust to pay the rents to the wife for life, and then to sell and hold the proceeds (in the events which happened) in trust for himself, and he covenanted to make up the wife's income to £300 a year. The husband paid nothing

Art. 81. under the covenant, and in 1868 he was adjudicated a bankrupt. The trustees proved for arrears due down to the date of the bankruptcy, but there were further arrears due to them since that date. On the death of the wife, the husband's assignee in bankruptcy claimed the leaseholds, but it was held that the trustees were entitled to retain them until the arrears were satisfied; and semble, that the right of trustees to retain trust property as against a beneficiary who owes money to them as trustees under the instrument creating the trust, exists in favour of trustees of a voluntary settlement which has been so completed as to be enforceable by the court (g). The rule applies even where the debt is statute barred (h).

who has been innocently overpaid is liable to

5. Where a trustee has made an over-payment to a beneficiary in error, he can recoup himself out of any other interest (if any) of that beneficiary in the trust estate (i); but the court will not, as a rule, order the over-paid beneficiary personally to refund to the trustee who has been disallowed the item in his accounts (k). However, it would seem that a co-beneficiary could compel repayment of the excess (l); but the onus would lie upon him of proving that what the other beneficiary had received was an over-payment, having regard to the value of the estate at the date of the payment, and did not arise merely by reason of subsequent depreciation (m). This, of course, presupposes that payment at all, at the date in question, was proper; for otherwise, if the date for payment had not arisen, the payment would itself have been a breach of trust to which the payee would have been privy.

6. But where a testator devised certain real estate for life to one of his executors and trustees, and the devisee afterwards committed a breach of trust, and filed his petition for liquidation, it was held that, as against the trustee in liquidation, the other cestuis que trusts had no lien on the interest of the trustee; the Lord Justice JAMES saying: "The estate of a legal devisee is, under no circumstances, under the control of the court" (n). Whether, however, the same rule applies to legal estates or interests under a settlement to which the beneficiary in default is a party seems questionable. In Woodyatt v. Gresley (o), it was held that it did not. On the other hand, in the more recent case of Re Brown, Dixon v. Brown (p), KAY, J., said: "It has always been a rule of the Court of Chancery that if a trustee misappropriates trust money, and has an equitable interest under the trust deed, the court will not allow him to receive any part of the trust fund in which he is equitably interested under the trust, until he has made good his default as trustee. That is a doctrine which is not in the least in question, and is very thoroughly established. But if the trustee has, under the will or other instrument which created the trust, a legal interest in land which is not bound by the trust at all, then the Court of Equity has no power to lay hold of that legal interest or to assert anything in the nature of a lien or charge upon it in order to recoup the breach of trust."

Art. 81.

Rule does not apply to legal beneficial interests.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF PARAGRAPH (3).

1. It seems to be clear that, apart from s. 45 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), beneficiaries have no right to demand that the interest of a beneficiary who has been party to a breach of trust shall be impounded to make good the loss to the trust estate where she is a married woman restrained from anticipation (q). It is however submitted that s. 45 of the Trustee Act, 1893, enables the court, Whether interest of married woman restrained from anticipation can be impounded.

Art. 81. in the exercise of its discretion, to entertain such a demand where the breach has been committed at the instigation, or at the request or with the written consent of such a beneficiary. No doubt the words of the statute confer this power on the court for the indemnity of the trustee, and not for the indemnity of the other beneficiaries, unless the concluding words, "or person claiming through him," can be said to embrace the beneficiaries, which seems doubtful. But on the analogy of cases in which creditors of a trust business have been allowed to stand in the place of a trustee who has a right to be indemnified out of the trust estate (r), it is submitted that the beneficiaries ought to be allowed by way of subrogation to take the benefit of the indemnity which is given by the statute to a trustee in cases where that trustee is unable to make good the loss himself. If this be not so, it is, indeed, a strange anomaly that the authors of the Trustee Acts of 1888 and 1893, should have inserted a section dealing with the right of the trustee to impound the interest of a beneficiary particeps criminis by way of indemnity to himself, but should have omitted to make any similar statutory provision as to the rights of innocent co-beneficiaries to set off the loss against the share of the beneficiary in fault.

1. The rule enunciated in this article is derived from two well-known maxims, viz.: (1) where the equities are equal the law prevails ; and (2) as between mere equitable claimants qui prior in tempore, potior in jure est. In fact, where one of two innocent parties must suffer, then as equity is not called upon to interfere on behalf of either of them, the common law must take its course, and he who has got the legal estate, or its equivalent, will take priority over him who has a mere equitable claim, notwithstanding that the title of the legal claimant may have accrued after that of the equitable one. The rule is very strikingly and completely illustrated by the case of Cave v. Cave (a). There a trustee, who was a solicitor, fraudulently misappropriated the trust fund, and with it bought an estate which was conveyed to his brother. The brother then mortgaged the property by legal, and afterwards by equitable mortgages, the solicitor trustee acting on all such occasions as the solicitor both for mortgagor and mortgagees. The parties beneficially entitled under the trust claimed to follow their trust money into the property which had been bought with it, on the ground that, as the solicitor of the mortgagees had notice of the breach of trust, that notice must be imputed to the mortgagees themselves. It was, however, held that as the solicitor was a party to the fraud, notice of the equity of the beneficiaries could not be constructively imputed to the clients, the mortgagees, as the conduct of the agent raised a conclusive presumption that he would not communicate to the client the fact in controversy, and that consequently their equities and the equity of the beneficiaries were equal; whence it followed, on the maxim "where the equities are equal the law prevails," that the legal mortgagee, having the legal estate, took priority over the beneficiaries, but that the latter took priority over the equitable mortgagees because their equity was first in point of date (b).

Notice of
equity.

2. To deprive a person who has acquired for valuable consideration a legal right to property, the notice of a superior equity must be notice of facts which would clearly show the existence of such equity, at all events, to a lawyer. Thus, a bonâ fide purchaser for value is not bound by notice of a very doubtful equity; for instance, where the construction of a trust is ambiguous or equivocal (c).

Purchasing
of trustees who are mortgagees under a
mortgage.

3. So, it has been held that where two sets of trustees have joined in advancing money on a contributory mortgage (on the face of which their fiduciary characters appeared), and they sell under their power of sale, the purchaser is not bound to see that each set of trustees get their due proportion of the purchase money, on the ground, apparently, that the purchase money is not the debt, but only a security for it (d).

4. So, as has been already stated (e), where a trustee has overdrawn his banking account, his bankers have a first and paramount lien on all monies paid in by him, unless they have notice, not only that they are trust monies (f), but also that the payment to them constitutes a breach of trust (g). Art. 82.
Trust money paid in to trustee's private overdrawn account.

5. On similar grounds it has been held that a solicitor of a trustee may be debarred from accepting payments out of the estate in respect of costs properly incurred, notice must be brought home to him that at the time when he accepted them the trustee had been guilty of a breach of trust, such as would preclude him from resorting to the trust estate for payment of costs (h). Costs paid by defaulting trustee to his solicitor.

6. The subject of notice is now governed by s. 3 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), which is retrospective, and therefore the old cases may be considered obsolete, except so far as they may throw light on the construction of the new rules. Notice is usually spoken of as either actual or constructive. Actual notice, under the new law, is defined as "an instrument, fact, or thing which is in the party's own knowledge." Constructive notice is defined as "an instrument, fact, or thing which would have come to the party's knowledge if such inquiries and inspections had been made as ought reasonably to have been made by him, or which (in the same transaction with respect to which the question of notice arises) has come to the knowledge of his counsel, solicitor, or agent as such, or would have come to the knowledge of his solicitor or agent if such inquiries and inspections had been made as ought reasonably to have been made by them." What constitutes notice.

7. With regard to actual notice, knowledge is absolutely necessary. Mere gossip or report is not sufficient. Whether the notice must be given by a party interested or his agent Actual notice.

is perhaps doubtful. Lord St. Leonards seemed to think that it must. Mr. Dart, on the other hand, doubted it, and said it is one thing to say that "mere flying reports are not notice, and another to affirm that a purchaser could not be affected by a deliberate and particular statement of an adverse claim, unless made by a party interested. The credibility of the informant must surely be considered; nor does there seem to be any reason why, where notice has been given to the purchaser prior to the commencement of the treaty, the court should not consider whether such notice must not have been present to his mind during the treaty." That passage was written by Mr. Dart before the passing of the Conveyancing Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), and that statute seems to adopt his view, as the definition of actual notice (therein differing from the definition of constructive notice) does not state that the instrument, fact, or thing, must have come to the party's knowledge in the same transaction, nor have been notified by a party interested. Indeed, it would seem that actual notice is entirely a matter of evidence, and if the court comes to the conclusion that a party had in fact, at the date of the transaction, such knowledge as would operate on the mind of any rational man, or man of business, and make him act with reference to the knowledge he has so acquired, then he will be taken to have had actual notice. Whether he acquired his knowledge before or at the time of the transaction, and whether he acquired it from a party interested or not appears to be immaterial (i).

Constructive notice.

8. With regard to constructive or imputed notice, on the other hand, it is quite clear that a man is not liable for notice acquired by his counsel, solicitor, or agent, unless it has come to their knowledge in the very transaction with respect to which the question of notice arises. The fact that a solicitor has been in the habit of acting for a particular person cannot reasonably constitute that solicitor the agent of the client to bind him by receiving notices or information; for apart from the burden which it would impose on the memory of a solicitor non constat that the client may not have ceased to regard him as his solicitor (k). It has also been held that constructive notice of an equity through counsel, solicitor, or agent, is not imputed to the client, where the counsel, solicitor, or agent is party to a fraud which would be exposed if he had communicated the notice to his client (l). This case (Cave v. Cave) must, however, be carefully distinguished from the earlier cases of Boursot v. Savage (m), and Bradley v. Riches (n), which seem at first sight in direct conflict with it. The point in Boursot v. Savage was, that where a client has notice of the existence of a trust, and intends to get the equitable interests of beneficiaries from them, the fact that he gets the legal estate from a trustee who happens to be his solicitor, does not protect him if the solicitor forges the signatures of the beneficiaries. For he had notice of the equitable interests, and the fact that he was the innocent victim of a forgery does not give him an equal equity with the beneficiaries. In Bradley v. Riches the point decided was, that the presumption that a solicitor has communicated to his client facts which he ought to have made known is not rebutted by proof that it was the solicitor's interest to conceal the facts. There the fact omitted to be communicated was the existence of a valid mortgage; whereas in Cave v. Cave the fact omitted to be communicated was the prior commission of a fraud by the solicitor himself (o).

9. There is another species of imputed notice mentioned in the Conveyancing Act of 1882, of quite as much importance as that mentioned in the last illustration, viz., notice of "an instrument, fact, or thing which would have come to the party's knowledge, or to the knowledge of his solicitor or agent (not his counsel), if such inquiries or inspections had been made as ought reasonably to have been made by them." Thus, it has been held that whenever a purchaser, mortgagee or lessee, foregoes his strict right to title, whether

Art. 82. — by express contract or even by not negativing implied statutory conditions, he runs the risk of having constructive notice imputed to him of anything contained in any of the documents which he ought to have examined (p). It must also be borne in mind, that notice of the existence of a deed affecting the title, or which necessarily affects it, is notice of its contents if it can be got at. "Of course there may be cases where the deed cannot be got at, or for some other reason where, with the exercise of all the prudence in the world, you cannot see it, and then there will be no constructive notice affecting the title. There is also a class of cases, of which I think Jones v. Smith (q) is the most notorious, where a purchaser is told of a settlement which may or may not affect the title, and is told at the same time that it does not affect it, and in such cases there is no constructive notice. Supposing, as in Jones v. Smith, you are buying land of a married man, and you are told at the same time that there is a marriage settlement but that it does not embrace the land in question, you have no constructive notice of its contents. Because, although you know there is a settlement, you are told it does not affect the land at all. If every marriage settlement necessarily affected all a man's land, then you would have constructive notice; but as a settlement may not relate to his land at all, or only to some other portions of it, the mere fact of your having heard of a settlement does not give you constructive notice of its contents if you are told at the same time that it does not affect the land" (r). A similar instance of the same rule occurs in the case of mortgages, where the purchase-money is expressed to be advanced by several mortgagees on a joint account. No doubt in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred such mortgagees are trustees; but as there is nothing on the face of the deed to show that the money is trust money, and as the fact of persons advancing money on a joint account does not necessarily imply that it is trust money, a purchaser or transferee never inquires whether there is a trust.

(q) 1 Hare, 43.

(r) Per JESSEL, M.R., Patman v. Harland, supra.

10. In addition to documents, constructive notice may be imputed to a purchaser from the state, appearance or occupation of property. For instance, the existence of a sea-wall bounding property has been held to give constructive notice of a liability to keep it in repair (s). So notice of a tenancy is notice of its terms; and generally, where a person purchases property where a visible state of things exists, which could not legally exist, or is very unlikely to exist without the property being subject to some burden, he is taken to have notice of the nature and extent of the burden (t). Art. 82.

11. If an alienee of trust property is a volunteer, then the estate will remain burdened with the trust, whether he had notice of the trust (u) or not (x); for a volunteer has no equity as against a true owner. Absence of notice will not protect a volunteer.

12. However, some transfers, apparently voluntary, have been held to be equivalent to alienations for value. Thus, in Thorndike v. Hunt (y), a trustee of two different settlements having applied to his own use funds subject to one of the settlements, replaced them by funds which, under a power of attorney from his co-trustee under the other, he transferred into the names of himself and his co-trustee in the former. In a suit in respect of breaches of trust of the former settlement, the trustees of it transferred the fund thus replaced into court, and it was held by the Court of Appeal that the transfer into court was equivalent to an alienation for value without notice, and that the beneficiaries under the other settlement could not follow the trust fund. Transfer of fund into court equivalent to alienation for value.

13. So incumbrancers on a fund in court which has been transferred to a separate account before the incumbrances were created, are not postponed to prior equitable claims of other beneficiaries under the same settlement, subsequently transferred to a separate account. Part of trust fund in court transferred to a separate account.

discovered (z). For, when a fund is carried over to a separate account in an action for administering the trust, it is released from the general questions in the action and becomes ear-marked as being subject only to the questions arising upon the particular matter referred to in the heading of the account (a). All other questions are in fact treated as res judicata. That fund has been awarded by the court to the parties falling under the heading of the separate account, and it is too late for others to try to upset the court's award. It is in fact equivalent to a transfer of the legal estate or interest.

with notice from pur-
without.

14. A purchaser with notice from a purchaser without notice is safe; for if he were not, an innocent purchaser for value would be incapable of ever alienating the property which he had acquired without breach of duty, and such a restraint on alienation would necessarily create that stagnation against which the law has always set its face (b).

Where equities are equal and no legal estate
in either

15. Where a trustee, holding a mortgage (c) or a lease (d), deposits the deed with another to secure an advance to himself, the lender will have no equity against the cestuis que trusts, however bonâ fide he may have acted, and however free he may have been of notice of the trustee's fraud. For he has not got the legal estate, and therefore his equity, being no stronger than that of the cestuis que trusts, the maxim, "Qui prior in tempore, potior in jure est" applies.

16. On the same principle, where a trustee has wrongfully spent trust funds in the purchase of property, and afterwards sold such last-mentioned property to a third party without notice, then, if the legal estate has not been conveyed to the third party, the cestuis que trusts will have priority over him (e). For they have a right (as has been shown in

17. It is upon this principle that choses in action are generally taken subject to all equities affecting them. Thus, in Turton v. Benson (g), a son, on his marriage, was to have from his mother, as a portion, a sum equal to that with which his intended father-in-law should endow the intended wife. The son, in order to induce the mother to give him a larger portion, entered into a collusive arrangement with the father-in-law, whereby, in consideration of the latter nominally endowing his daughter with £3,000, the son gave him a bond to repay him £1,000, part of it. This bond, being made upon a fraudulent consideration, was void in the hands of the father-in-law, and it was held that, being a chose in action, he could not confer a better title upon his assignee.

18. Negotiable instruments are, however, an exception to the rule as to choses in action passing subject to all prior equities. For the common law, with regard to them, adopted the custom of merchants, and recognised that such instruments were transferable. Consequently, the transferee of a negotiable instrument has a legal, as well as an equitable, interest; and where the equities are equal he is protected against prior equities by his legal title (h). Of course, however, where the transferee has notice (express or imputed (i)) of prior equities, he will be postponed.

Art. 82.

Bond fide purchasers from trustees cannot after notice get
from them.

19. The bond fide purchaser of an equitable interest, without notice of an express trust, cannot defend his position by subsequently, and after notice, getting in an outstanding legal estate from the trustee; for by so doing he would be guilty of taking part in a new breach of trust (k). But if he can perfect his legal title without being a party to a new breach of trust (as, for instance, by registering a transfer of shares which have been actually transferred before notice, or by getting in the legal estate from a third party), he may legitimately do so (l).

P. S. GREGORY, Esq.,

Of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law.

THE purpose of this Work is to supply, in a convenient and easily accessible arrangement, a complete collection of all the Forms and Precedents which are necessary to the lawyer in the practice of his profession.

Unlike existing Collections of Forms, which are mostly the work of a single author, the Forms in this Work will be written by Specialists in their respective branches, but harmony and consistency will be secured by their passing under the eye of the General Editor.

In short, this Work will be a complete Library of all Forms and Precedents—other than litigious Forms—that a Lawyer can possibly require.
